TO THE READER.

MEMORIALS of the Elizabethan culture, like mansions in the style of the Elizabethan architecture, would soon be passing away, were it not that they are reproduced from time to time, and reinstated in the interest and perchance in the regard of the literary world. When a work curious and instructive, if not of high value, has almost perished from the ravages of age, no disservice can it be to literature to rescue it from impending oblivion and offer it again to public notice. The inheritance which has come to us from a renowned ancestry is thus maintained in honour, and a restoration though it be only of a summer-house in a pleasure-garden, or of an oratory where by succeeding generations prayer was wont to be made, betokens as much reverence and love towards the illustrious dead, as if we had power to inscribe their names in the world's pantheon or to raise some monument of grandeur that would endure for ages. Whitney's own ideas are in fact so carried out :

"For writinges last when wee bee gonne, and doe preserue our name."

The work of restoration and of illustration now attempted for Whitney's Emblems was entered upon with a love for it, as well as from a desire to make the emblem literature of the sixteenth century more known ; and it may be that such love may have covered a multitude of sins in the Author's style and mode both of thought and expression ; but in stating the simple fact that his labours have been lightened and repaid by the liking which he had for them, the editor does not wish a single fault to be condoned. The themes here pursued have seldom if ever been treated of to the same extent or in the manner adopted, — and the probability is that some errors have been fallen into which further researches will rectify, and that inquiries have been left unattempted which are needed for the true appreciation of the subject. To place his readers as far as he can on the vantage ground both for judging his labours and for following them out to greater perfectness, the editor presents a full general Index as well as several special Indices, and has in most cases been scrupulous to name and quote his authorities. This apparatus will render the work of greater service to literary men.

So far as is ascertained no similar work exists, and though very incomplete as a history outside of the period which it embraces and of the special object to which it is devoted, it will supply the student and the general reader with information respecting emblem books and authors not easily accessible, and will enable him, if so disposed, to arrive at other stores of knowledge on the same subject. Some of the volumes consulted are of great rarity and to be found only in choice and richly-furnished libraries. For this reason, instead of a simple reference the titles themselves are photo-lithographically exhibited, and one or more pages of the devices in each emblem-book which Whitney adopted are also given in fac-simile. This feature of the work the editor trusts will be very useful to those readers who have not opportunities for consulting the old emblematists, or who may desire to see what they really are.

Philothei Symb. Christ. 1577

A writer of the sixteenth century, Hachtenburg of Francfort, assures us with much positiveness of expression, "Not one in a hundred can produce a really good emblem; not one in a thousand is competent to pass judgment upon the emblems of others." This sentiment is repeated not in depreciation of any opinion on the editor's share in this reprint and on the essays and notes with which it is accompanied, — but as an occasion to remind readers that a fac-simile by the photo-lithographic process is very different from that by the engraver's art and skill. The burin can retouch what is defective in the original, — can heighten the beauty and conceal the blemishes and yet preserve an identity of outline and character, — but the sun-light, the lens, and the camera reproduce without correction or adornment; if the original be worn and faded, — worn and faded is the copy; as the presses of Rome, Venice, Paris, Lyons, Basle, and Antwerp left their work three centuries since, — exactly so does it reappear; and this constitutes the defect as well as the excellence of photo-lithography in the printing of books.

The skill and pains bestowed by the various artists on the volume now in the reader's hands call for the editor's expression of approval. The stone has been made to give back the images, the letters and forms which the sunlight had drawn from the old pages set before it. To Mr. BROTHERS are due the photographs and their preparation, and to Mr. HARRISON the impressions themselves; the embellished capitals and other woodcuts are by Mr. MORTON, and the letter-press printing is the work of Messrs. CHARLES SIMMS & CO.

No more need I say than to express the hope that the study of the Emblem literature may be revived, — and other similar works find a similar republication.

These lines, the last as I imagined of this work, had been written and printed, and the proof awaited only revision ere my editorial labours would be ended, when, on the 14th of February 1866, I received some further information of high interest respecting the author, to which I ought at least to allude, especially as it comes from an American branch of the family, which under their ancestor, John Whitney, settled in New England so long ago as April 1635. His descendant, Henry Austin Whitney esq., of Boston, U. S. A., writes to me from the Hague, February 5th, 1866:

"I was exceedingly gratified and surprised to-day, during a visit to Leyden, to find that you had carried into effect what has for several years been one of my dreams, — the re-production of Whitney's emblems in fac-simile. My only regret is that the work has probably so far progressed that you will not be able to make use of one or two items relating to our author which it is in my power to furnish." "The most important of my collections is the Will of Geffrey Whitney, of which I have a copy in Boston. It is quite curious and important as settling the date of the writer's death, 1603 or 4, I think. In the testament, if I recollect rightly, he gives his library of Latin books to his nephew the son of his brother Brooke Whitney, 'on condition that he become a scholar.'"

See Emb. p. 88, and Intro. Diss. xlv. and xlvii.

Mr. H. A. Whitney then informs me that he has a large collection of materials relating to the Whitneys of different counties, some portion of which would explain who Robert Whitney is, referred to by me, and would also give data relating to Geffrey Whitney, our author's cousin, "Merchant Tailor of London." He sought out what escaped my inquiries in July last, — the original manuscript Catalogue of the Students at the University of Leyden, and in the General Index found "Godf. Whitneus," with reference to p. 187 of the same volume, "where appears this entry: 'Anno 1586, Martii 1. Godfridus Whitneus, Junior, Anglus.'" This undoubtedly refers to our author, who, for several pages, is the only Englishman recorded.

The same letter also remarks: "On a trip of pleasure through Amsterdam to Paris, I resolved to make a brief visit to Leyden, not only as a place of peculiar interest to a native of New England, but in order to satisfy myself on one or two points relating to the author of the Emblems. In pursuance of my purpose I sought the University, and on making known the object of my inquiries, the librarian, M. Du Rieu, stated that Mr. Green was in Leyden about July last in quest of similar information. He at once kindly showed me the specimen sheets of your new edition, and I had just time to glimpse at the interesting and satisfactory essay read before the Cheshire Archæological Society. I was, I assure you, pleased to find that I have been so ably and thoroughly anticipated, and can now only regret that I had not known of your undertaking in October last, before leaving home, as it would have been my pleasure to have placed at your disposal whatever material was at my command."

So courteous and valuable an expression of regard for the labours I have been engaged in and brought to a conclusion, I acknowledge with the highest respect and under a deep sense of obligation, for the true liberality of feeling which dictated it; and I stop the press to add that should Mr. Henry Austin Whitney resolve on offering to the world the information respecting Geffrey Whitney which is in his possession, I shall most cheerfully give him every facility in my power for communicating with my subscribers. Possibly an Appendix to this fac-simile reprint might satisfy the conditions of the case and supply the admirers of emblem literature with the additional materials. I regret if my own labours interfere with those of one who by position and kinsmanship to the author had a superior claim over mine to be editor of "The Choice of Emblemes." He will not however object that in the breast of a stranger there has been kindled the admiration which in himself was a natural feeling of affection towards a writer who nearly three hundred years ago bore and adorned the Whitney name.

INTRODUCTORY DISSERTATION.

CHAPTER I.

EMBLEM LITERATURE.

SECTION I. — NATURE OF EMBLEMS.

EFFREY WHITNEY, in defining, as he does very accurately, the nature of Emblems, assigns to them almost their strictly literal meaning, as ornaments placed upon any surface, or inlaid, so as to form a pattern or device. He says: "The worde being in Greeke ἐμβάλλεσθαι, vel ἐπεμβλῆσθαι, is as muche to saye in Englishe as To set in, or To put in: properlie ment by suche figures or workes, as are wroughte in plate, or in stones in the pauementes, or on the waules, or suche like, for the adorning of the place: hauinge some wittie deuise expressed with cunning woorkemanship, somethinge obscure to be perceiued at the first, whereby, when with further consideration it is vnderstood, it maie the greater delighte the behoulder." So, the article EMBLEMA, by James Yates, M.A., defines the word as denoting "an inlaid ornament," and applies it to works resembling "our marquetry, buhl, and Florentine mosaics," and to "those in which crusts (crustæ) exquisitely wrought in relief and of precious metals, such as gold, silver, and amber, were fastened upon the surface of vessels or other pieces of furniture."

See his Address to the Reader.

Smith's Dict. Gk. and Rom. Ant. 2nd ed. p. 456.

Spenser appears to have such work in view, when he describes "a throne of gold full bright and sheene:"

Faerie Queene, v. 9. 27.

"Adorned all with gemmes of endlesse price,
As either might for wealth have gotten beene,
Or could be fram'd by workman's rare device;
And all embost with lyons and with flourdelice."

And when Shakespeare sets forth the coronation of "The goodliest woman," Anne Bullen, he avers:

Hen. VIII. act iv. sc. i. l. 87.

"She had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems
Laid nobly on her."

Syntagma de Symbolis: per Clavdivm Minoem. Antv. 1581, p. 13.

An early commentator on Emblem-books, Claude Mignault, in 1574, endeavours to establish a distinction between emblems and symbols, which "many persons," he affirms, "rashly and ignorantly confound together. The force of the emblem depends upon the symbol, but they differ as man and animal; the latter has a more general meaning, the former a more special. All men are animals, but all animals are not men; so all emblems are symbols, tokens, or signs, but all symbols are not emblems: the two possess affinity indeed, but not identity."

We shall form, however, a sufficiently correct notion on this subject, if we conclude, that any figure engraven, embossed, or drawn,—any moulding, or picture, the implied meaning of which is something additional to what the actual delineation represents, is an emblem. Some thought or fancy, some sentiment or saying is portrayed, and the portraiture constitutes an emblem. Thus hieroglyphics, heraldic badges, significant carvings, and picture writings, are emblems; besides the forms, or devices, visibly delineated, they possess secret meanings, and shadow forth, or line forth sentiments, feelings, or proverbial truths.

Naturally and easily the term emblem became applicable to any painting, drawing, or print that was representative of an action, of a quality of mind, or of any peculiarity or attribute of character. Emblems in fact were, and are, a species of hieroglyphics, in which the figures or pictures, besides denoting the natural objects to which they bear resemblances, were employed to express properties of the mind, virtues and abstract ideas, and all the operations of the soul.

Excepting in the Sacred Scriptures, the earliest account we have of a work of emblematic art is the description which Homer gives, so graphically, of the forging by Vulcan of a shield for Achilles. It is solid and large, decorated all over; round it is a shining rim, triple, like marble bright, and from it a silver belt: on the shield itself there were five tablets, and for it many figures of skilful workmanship. Hesiod also, though not with equal beauty, gives a similar description of the shield of Hercules; and the two find imitators in Virgil, when the shield of Æneas is spoken of as a specimen of artistic power. Iliad, xviii. 478-607. Eoeæ of Hesiod, iv. 141-317. Æneid, viii. 615-731.

But a work, truly emblematical, is presented so early as about 400 years B.C.: it is The Tablet of Cebes, a disciple of Socrates. Of the numerous editions, between 1497 and our own day, we give the title-page of one, which to the original Greek adds a translation both into Latin and Arabic, and which also contains a pretty emblematical device of the printer, "Fac et spera," Work and hope. The Tablet itself is a philosophical description of a picture which, it is said, was set up in the temple of Kronos at Athens or at Thebes, and which presents a symbolical view of Human Life—of its temptations and dangers, and of the course to be persevered in to attain the mansions of blessedness. The persons, characters and circumstances are drawn in so clear and lively a manner as to have furnished to the celebrated Dutch designer and engraver, Romyn de Hooghe, sufficient guidance for delineating the whole story of Human Life as narrated to the Grecian sage. See Plate I. Plate III.

Of Cebes himself we need only say that he was cotemporary with Parrhasius the painter, Euclid of Megara, and Lysias the orator. Xenophon ranks him among the few intimate friends of Socrates who excelled the rest in the innocency of their lives; and Plato names him as "intimate and friendly with us all," and characterizes him in the Phædon as a sagacious investigator of truth, never yielding his assent without convincing reasons. Memorabilia, i, 2. Epistle 13.

The Hieroglyphics of Horapollo, or Horus Apollo, of which the title-page to the Paris edition of 1551 is given in Plate II., is professedly written in the language of ancient Egypt, and was translated into Greek towards the end of the fifth century, in the time of the emperor Zeno. It is certainly a book of emblems, and probably the most ancient we possess. With the emblem writers of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries it obtained high authority, and undoubtedly served them for guidance; but very Plate II.

contradictory opinions are entertained of the work in the present day: some maintaining that the writer "was a native of Egypt," and that he was "a person who knew the monuments well, and had studied them with care;" others averring that "his authority as an interpreter is in itself worth nothing," and "that the power of reading a hieroglyphical inscription was not possessed by him, if it existed in his time."*

Smith's Dict. Gk. and Rom. Biog. vol. ii. pp. 517-518.

Kenrick's Anc. Egypt, vol. i. pp. 288-290.

It may here be observed that the symbols on the dedication-page of this fac-simile reprint of Whitney are taken from one of the emblems of Achilles Bocchius, edition 1574, who names them Egyptian letters; but on Samuel Sharpe's very competent authority I learn, they may be Gipsy marks, but are not true Egyptian signs. Taking them for what they are worth, I nevertheless find the eye symbolical of Deity; the lamp-burning, of life; the lamp-extinguished, of the soul freed from the body; the ox's-head, of labour; and the spindle, of the thread of life. A feather and a laurel-branch, also occurring in the dedication-page, are hieroglyphics, according to Horapollo, and have a meaning. The others, which remain unexplained, doubtless were significant to Achilles Bocchius, and would be to ourselves could we but obtain his key.

Horapollo, ed. 1551, pp. 219-222.

Horapollo, bk. ii. 81 and 46, ed. 1551, pp. 178 and 143.

Whitney (as at p. 126) and the other emblematists not unfrequently had recourse to the descriptions in Horapollo. One of his hieroglyphics we have had figured; it is the swan,—to symbolize old age loving music,—the reason assigned being, "because this bird when it is old sends forth its sweetest melody."

Plate II.

Horapollo, bk. ii. 39, ed. 1551, p. 136.

Coins and medals, the crests and cognizances of heraldry, the flower-language of Persian and Hindoo maidens, the picture-writing of the Mexicans, and the tree-and-tomahawk newspapers of the North American Indians,—all would require full notice as instances of emblem art, were we attempting more than a sketch.

A very brief statement will suffice to point out how they fur-

* "The only ancient author who has left us a correct and full account of the principle of the Egyptian writing is the learned Alexandrian father, Clemens, who wrote towards the end of the second century after Christ." So testifies John Kenrick. And whoever desires to read a brief yet admirably clear account of modern discoveries respecting the meaning of the Egyptian hieroglyphics is advised to consult his work, Ancient Egypt under the Pharaohs, two volumes 8vo, London 1850.

Kenrick's Anc. Egypt, vol. i. p. 291.

nish examples of the nature of emblems. On Grecian coins, the owl, to use heraldic language, is the crest of Athens; a wolf's head, that of Argos; and a tortoise, that of the Peloponnesus: and on Roman coins, the figure of a woman seated on a globe is the emblem of Italy; that of a woman solitary and weeping beneath a palm-tree, of Judea, fulfilling the prophecy—"she being desolate shall sit upon the ground." An eagle grasping the thunderbolt of Jove is symbolical of Rome; and Ceres dispensing plenty from her horn of abundance, is typical of the peace which under Decius the empire enjoyed. Isaiah iii. 26.

So at much greater length might the nature of emblems be set forth with abundant illustrations; but whoso cannot now comprehend something respecting them would still be ignorant though the heavens became his scroll and all the visions of prophecy and the fancies of poets were painted upon them, and with his divining rod an angel touched each device in its order and said, "See, and understand."

SECTION II.—Early Emblem-books, and their Introduction into English Literature.

EARLY emblem-books, from 1481 to 1522, are soon counted. We nearly exhaust the list when we name Gerard Leeu, Sebastian Brant, and Andrew Alciat—a Dutchman, a German and an Italian.

The closing in of the fifteenth century saw the rise of a species of literature in which the graving tool was very extensively employed to illustrate, as well the proverbs and terse sayings prevalent in the world, as works of greater pretensions, in which genius took a higher flight, and accomplished more important aims. These illustrations may not have been introduced as profusely as in modern times; but, I dare to say, they were often marked by superiority of artistic power.

Dante's Inferno, published at Florence in 1481, was one of the first books thus to be embellished; and in the same year, in Holland, as a prelude to the emblem-book Operas, which followed, that most odd of all odd books made its appearance—"Twys-spraeck der creaturen," or Dialogues of the Creatures, by Gerard Leeu, of Gouda, near Rotterdam. The copy we consulted, in the Bibliotheca Hulthemiana at Brussels, is a small folio in Gothic characters, the pages and folios unnumbered, and with a considerable apparatus of rather coarsely-executed wood engravings. The dialogues are 122: the first is between the Sun and the Moon; the second, between "costeliken ghestienten," costly stones; the one hundred and seventh, between the Wolf and the Ass, the picture representing the two creatures sawing wood with a vertical saw; the one hundred and twenty-first, between a Man and his Wife; and the one hundred and twenty-second, between Man and Death. The last page is almost entirely occupied by a coat of arms, and the work thus concludes: "En is volmaeckt ter goude in hollant bi me gheraert leeu prēter ter goude optē vierden dach van april Int iaer MCCCCLXXXI.," i.e. Here is finished at Gouda in Holland by me Gerard Leeu printer at Gouda upon the fourth day of April in the year 1481.

The next work to be mentioned opens a direct communication in emblem literature between England and the Continental nations, inasmuch as it was soon translated, or rather paraphrased, into English by Alexander Barclay, and printed first by Wynkyn de Worde in 1508, then by Richard Pynson in 1509, and afterwards in 1570 by J. Cawood. Before the end of the fifteenth century, in 1494, the original, by Sebastian Brant, appeared in German, and is usually referred to as "THE SHIP OF FOOLS." A copy is in the British Museum; the woodcuts are rather small, but spirited, and the designs are the same with those of some subsequent editions in Latin and French. The Latin translation, bearing the title, "Stultifera Nauis," or Fool-freighted Ship, by James Locher, is a quarto volume of 156 folios, with 115 woodcuts, and underwent the revision of Brant himself. It was published at Basle, "that city of Germany most worthy of praise," by John Bergmande Olpe, "in the year of our salvation M.CCCCXCVII." The Plates, IV. and V., are from the title-page and twenty-ninth folio of the fine and perfect copy in the very choice emblem library collected by the late Joseph Brooks Yates of Liverpool, and now the property of his grandson Henry Yates Thompson.* Plate V., "Seruire duobus,"

To serve two masters, well illustrates the saying which Whitney adopted, "Nemo potest duobus dominis seruire," and embellished with the device of a man dragging the decalogue by his right foot, and attempting to carry the globe on his left shoulder. Brant presents the example of a hunter blowing his horn, and seeking with one dog to catch two hares at the same time.

Whitney p. 223.

Plate V.

Alexander Barclay's work, "The Shyp of Folys of the Worlde,"* was in part only a translation of Brant's Stultifera Nauis; in part it was simply an imitation. And thus, perhaps, it may be regarded as the very first attempt in our language at emblem-book art. Some may be inclined to contest the accuracy of this conclusion; and when Brant's and his translator's works are compared with the perfected emblems of Alciat and of Giovio, the doubt may rise into a certainty: but in the progress of any branch of literature, as in other things, "there is first the blade, then the ear, and after that the full and ripe corn in the ear."

The translator gives the following account of himself: that his book "was translated ĩ the College of Saynt Mary Otery in the counte of Deuonshyre, out of Laten, Frenche and Doche into Englysshe tonge by Alexander Barclay Preste, and at that tyme Chaplen in the sayde College." He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, about 1495, and died in 1552 rector of All Hallows, Lombard-street, London. The memoir of him in the Penny Cyclopædia gives the titles of nine of his works, and shows him to have been a voluminous writer: it declares also that "he was one of the refiners of the English language, and left many testimonies behind him of his wit and learning."

Penny Cycl. vol. iii. p. 440.

Barclay's Shyp of Folys of the Worlde contains many curious woodcuts. A good idea of them may be gained from the first in the series which "represents several vessels loaded with fools of various denominations." This is taken from the French translation, "La grãt nef des folz du mõde," and has appended to it in full the title of the Latin translation, "Stultifera Nauis."

At the beginning of the sixteenth century the art of pictorial illustration, either from brass or from wood, was carried to a very high degree of excellence. Italy might boast of Marc Antonio, who died in 1527; Germany, of Albert Durer, down to 1528; and Holland, of Lucas Jacobs, better known as Lucas van Leyden, until his death in 1533. These "skilled artisans" left pupils, followers and worthy compeers, who did not allow their "glorious mystery" to retrograde; and the touch, the turn, the soul-inspired power of their hand, survive in many a page of that eventful era.

Herbert's ed. p. 1570.

If the recording line in Ames' Antiquities of Printing be correct, namely "1551, Alciat's Emblems, Lugduni 1551, octavo," there was an English version of "honest Alciat" at this early date. As far as I have discovered, no other trace exists of such a translation. Grant that it was made, it would, almost of a certainty, have been a very small volume similar to Wechel's edition of Paris 1534, or to the Aldine at Venice in 1546, the one contained in 120 pages, the other in 48 leaves.

Plates VI. and XVI.

See Transact. Liverpool L. and P. Society, No. 5, 1849, pp. 22, 23.

A manuscript translation of Alciat into English, which, though incomplete, evidently was prepared for publication, with the devices drawn and coloured, is in the possession of Henry Yates Thompson, and "appears to be of the time of James the First." The manuscript thus translates Alciat's thirtieth emblem, imitated by Whitney, p. 73:

> "The stork, which is well noted for her love,
> In lofty nest hir naked birds doth feed;
> And hopes that she the like kindness shall prove,
> When she, being olde, shall stand thereof in need.
> The gratefvl babes do not hir hope defeate,
> They bear their dam, and give unto hir meate."

Sketch of Books of Emb. by J. B. Yates, 1849, p. 23.

Sir Thomas Wyatt, the elder, who died in 1541, and Henry Howard earl of Surrey, who was beheaded in 1547, — "the two chieftains," as they are named, of the courtly poets, — were well acquainted with the literature of Southern Europe, and probably with the emblem writers of the nations dwelling there; but it appears to have been Spenser who, in 1579, in The Shepheard's Calender, "entitled to the noble and vertuous Gentleman, most worthie of all titles both of learning and chivalry, Maister Philip Sidney," was so far acquainted with emblem writings as to give emblem-mottoes without devices, like songs without words. We find these mottoes, termed emblems, in Italian, English, Latin, French, and even Greek, and after Spenser's death, the folio edition of his works issued in 1616 gives a woodcut emblematical of each month in the year, and thus renders the Shepherd's Calendar a near approach to the emblem-books of a former century.

We may add that Spenser's Visions of Bellay, composed about the year 1569, were derived* from Joachim du Bellay, "the Ovid of France," and needed only the designer and engraver to make them as perfectly emblem pictures as were the publications of Alciatus, Sambucus and Whitney. Those visions portray in words the world's vanity, which an artist might express in drawings. Take the description of the "pillers of iuorie," of "the chapters alabaster," of "a victorie with golden wings," and of "the triumphing chaire, the auncient glorie of the Romane lordes;" and of the whole representation might be wrought a most lively and cunning emblem.

Whether William de la Perriere's Théâtre des Bons Engins, Paris 1539, was rendered into English at so early a date, is doubtful; but William Stirling, esq., of Keir, informs me that he possesses "a fragment of an English translation" of this author, without the title. From this copy therefore the date cannot be determined, but by the cast of the type and of the rude woodcuts "it might be of the sixteenth century, and probably as early as Daniell's Jovius."

The next immediate link between our own country, Britain, and the emblem writers of Italy, France, Spain, Germany and the Netherlands is supplied by Beza's Portraits and Emblems. This work, published at Geneva in 1580, is dedicated to James VI., king of Scotland, and contains, as its frontispiece, the earliest known likeness of that monarch, when in his fourteenth year. Such a portrait would probably secure attention to the book in this island, and its well-executed devices would serve to foster among us a taste for emblem literature. No translation however of Beza into English appeared, and his emblems still remain in their original Latin only.

"ornamentation-books" as other people indicated by the word emblem. Paolo Giovio, bishop of Nocera, wrote a discourse on the subject and entitled it, Ragionamento di Paolo Giovio sopra i motti e designi d'armi e d'amore volgormente chiamati imprese, Venice 1556, in 8vo, "A Discourse by Paulus Jovius on Mottoes and Designs of Arms and of Love, commonly called Imprints." The work went through several editions, and in 1561 was translated into French by Vasquin Filleul. An English translation was issued in 1585, the year before Whitney's Choice of Emblems: it is not indeed embellished with woodcuts or engravings, but in other respects is an emblem-book in English. The translator was the poet-laureat and historian, Samuel Daniel of Taunton, who was born in 1562 and died in 1619. He entitles his work, The Worthy Tract of Paulus Jovius, containing a Discourse of Rare Inventions . . : called Imprese, with a Preface:" by Samuel Daniell, London 1585, 8vo. But for the want of devices, or engravings, this may be regarded as an English emblem-book equally with Whitney's, which it preceded as a printed work, though probably not as a composition.

Still, with the modifications that have been adverted to, the praise may be accorded to Geffrey Whitney of having, in 1586, been the first to present to the English public an emblem-book complete in all its parts, and showing by the union of learning and of the engraver's art how, among the nations of continental Europe, a literature had been raised up and had grown into popularity which a century before had no recognised existence. Whitney however is to be the special theme of the next chapter, and we pass on to complete, as far as is really needed, our sketch of the steps by which emblem-books were brought into Britain.

To the Rev. Thomas Corser, rector of Stand, near Manchester, I am indebted, among other favours, for the loan of a copy of the rare translation into English of Claude Paradin's Devises Héroiqves. The volume is in 16mo, containing 368 pages, and ornamented with many woodcuts of considerable excellence. The initials only of the translator (P. S.) are given, and the date is 1591. A curiously-worded dedication follows the title-page: "To the Right Worshipfvll the Renowmed Capteine Christopher Carleill Esquier, chiefe Commander of her Maiesties forces in the Prouince of Vlster in the Realme of Ireland, and Seneshall there of the Countries of Clandsboy, the Rowte, the Glens, the Duffre, and Kylultaugh." The prose of Paradin is given in English prose; and there are a few specimens of very inferior verses, as at p. 28:

"These Dartes are peace to humble men,
but wane to proud in deed.
For why? both life and death also from our woundes do proceed."

SECTION III. — English Emblem-books, A.D. 1586–1686.

FROM what sources Emblem-books were first introduced into English literature has just been shown, and there is no absolute necessity of following the subject to a later date; but to render our view more complete we will take a rapid glance at the English books of emblems for a century after Whitney. Along with Whitney are recorded the names of Willet and Combe, as worthy to be matched with Alciatus, Reusnerus and Sambucus. Of Thomas Combe's writings nothing is known now to exist; neither the British Museum nor the emblem collection of the marquis of Blandford possesses them, and they are unknown to Mr. J. Brooks Yates and to William Stirling, esq., of Keir: they take rank therefore with the lost one of the Pleiades, and no longer offer even a point of light to the literary world. The praise of Andrew Willet is celebrated by Thomas Fuller. His father, Thomas Willet, was prebendary of Ely, where Andrew was born in 1560, and where, probably, he died in 1621. He was a copious writer, according to the Bodleian catalogue. His emblem-book, printed at Cambridge by John Legate, probably in 1598, is dedicated to the earl of Essex: it is a 4to, without cuts, and contains 84 pages. The title is a very long one, beginning with Sacrorvm Emblematvm Centvria vna, &c., "A Century of Sacred Emblems," &c. As a specimen of his style we add the English to his sixty-seventh emblem in Latin; subject — "Puerorum educatio," The education of boys:

And three things keepe in minde ful sure,

And manners then with knowledge pure ;

In these days of acrostics it may be not unacceptable to our readers to possess Willet's ingenious conceit, constituting his first emblem, "Boni Principis encomium," The praise of a good Prince. It is in Latin verses, arranged, like the curious fancies of Simias the Rhodian, in the form of a tree. The sentence on which the Latin lines turn is "Elizabetham Reginam Div nobis servet Iesvs incolvmem. Amen" — Elizabeth Queen, long may Jesus keep for us safe. Amen.

Generally each of Willet's emblems has a motto, a text from Scripture, some Latin verses, and the same rendered into English.

Samuel Egerton Brydges informs us he was also the author of An Epithalamium in English, and says of him: "I shall only cite the practical character at the end of the life and death of Dr. Andrew Willet:

"See here a true Nathaniel, in whose breast
A careful conscience kept her lasting feast;
Whose simple heart could never lodge a guile
In a soft word, nor malice in a smile.
He was a faithful labourer, whose pains
Was pleasure; and another's good, his gains:
The height of whose ambition was to grow
More ripe in knowledge, to make others know;
Whose lamp was ever shining, never hid;
And when his tongue preach'd not, his actions did.
The world was least his care; he fought for heav'n;
And what he had, he held not earn'd, but given:
The dearest wealth he own'd, the world ne'er gave;
Nor owes he ought but house-rent for a grave."

Contemporary also with Whitney was Abraham Fraunce, whose work, in 4to, was printed in London in 1588, *Insignium Armorum Emblematum Hieroglyphicorum et Symbolorum, quæ ab Italis Imprese nominantur Explicatio. There are no plates to the work; otherwise it is similar in character to Valerian's Hieroglyphica, sive de sacris Egyptiorum aliarumque gentium literis Commentarii;† folio, Basle 1556 and 1567, which abounds in woodcuts. These two works, however, are rather books of heraldry, of coins, inscriptions and sacred signs, than books of emblems.

Peacham's Minerva Britanna, a very close imitation of Whitney, even to the dividing of it into two parts, appeared in 1612, and is dedicated "to Henry Prince of Wales." In 1618 was issued The Mirrour of Majestie, of which no more than two copies are said to exist, the only perfect one being in the choice library of Mr. Corser, of Stand. Quarle's Emblems, Divine and Moral, the most popular of any in English, were published in 1635; and the same year George Withers gave to the world, with 200 fine copperplates by Crispin de Pass, A Collection of Emblems Antient and Moderne, quickened with Metrical Illustrations both Moral and Divine, disposed into Lotteries, folio, London. The year 1641 first saw Thomas Stirry's satire against Archbishop Laud, A Rot amongst the Bishops, or a terrible Tempest in the Sea of Canterbury, set forth in lively Emblems to please the judicious Reader; and we may again name Mr. Corser as possessing an original copy of the work almost unique. A second edition, 4to, was issued in 1655 of The Art of making Devices, treating of Hieroglyphicks, Symboles, Emblemes, Enigmas, &c., by Thomas Blount; and in 1665, without an author's name, but with 9 copperplate engravings, was set forth in 12mo, Astrea, or the Grove of Beatitude represented in Emblemes with Meditations. Philip Ayres, in 1683, was author of a small 4to, Emblemata Amatoria, "Emblems of Love," in four languages, dedicated "to the Ladies," with 44 copperplates. Hugo Hermann's Pia Desideria, Gemitus, Vota, Suspiria animæ pœnitentis, &c.* was published at Antwerp in 1628 with woodcuts; and again in 1632 with Bolswert's beautiful copperplates. "It was Englished by Edmund Arwaker, M.A., in 1686, and illustrated with 47 copperplates; but the omissions and alterations of the original render it scarcely deserving the name of a translation. In 1680 and in 1686 also was issued a work, now of extreme rarity, The Protestant's Vade Mecum, or Popery displayed in its proper colors in 30 Emblems. This date is exactly a century after Whitney, and it is unnecessary to name any works of a later time.†

Britain can advance no early claims to originality in the production of emblem-books, and scarcely improved the works of this kind which she touched upon and translated, yet she took no inconsiderable interest in emblem literature; and during the

These are: Montenay's Book of Armes with 100 godly Emblems, 1619; The Soule's Solace, or 31 Spirituall Emblemes, by Thomas Jennes, 1631; Colman's Death's Duel; Heywood's Pleasant Dialogues, &c., extracted from Jacob Catsius, 1637; Quarle's Hieroglyphics of ye Life of Man, 1638; Hall's Emblems, 1648; A Work for none but Angels and Men, 1650; Wonderful and strange Punishments inflicted on the Breakers of the 10 Commandments, 1650; Castanoza's Spiritual Conflict, 1652; and Miller's Emblems, Divine, Moral, &c., by a Person of Quality, 1673. century, beginning with Whitney and ending with Arwaker — if we except James or Jacob Catz,* who died in 1660 in his eighty-third year, and who to this day is spoken of familiarly yet affectionately in Holland, as "Vader Catz" — our country may be said to have marched at least with equal steps by the side of other European nations. We write, however, not to contest the palm of superiority, but simply to give a connected though brief view of the earlier emblem literature among ourselves. That attempt probably is not perfect in its parts, every emblem work not being included; there may be others who will correct our deficiencies, and present to the public a fuller and more accurate history. The materials exist, and knowledge and power in one I could name: but public patronage as yet flows in a scanty stream towards the editors of old emblem writers, and turns aside to support newer fancies; or perchance the ore we dig has not enough of sterling metal in it to make it worth the working.

Penny Cycl. vol. vi. p. 377.

SECTION IV. — Extent and Decline of Emblem Literature.

FOR how many years the Emblem literature bore an illustrious name, and to what extent over the nations of Europe it prevailed, a sentence or two will serve to point out. With Alciat, in 1522, we may date the rise of its popularity; with Paolo Giovio, Bocchius and Sambucus, its continuance; with Jacob Cats, a glory that still shines and has lately been renewed. All countries of Europe — except "Muscovie," which was Tartar, not Teutonic nor Roman — participated in the furore for emblems. The peninsulas of Spain and Italy, the distant Hungary, the Mediterranean Germany and France, Holland, Belgium, Britain, swelled the throng of votaries and contributed to emblem art.†

* A splendid tribute to his excellence has lately been supplied by the publication of Moral Emblems, from Jacob Catz and Robert Farlie, 4to, London 1862. The beautiful illustrations, by John Leighton, F.S.A., and the translations by the editor, Richard Pigot, are contributions in all respects worthy of emblem art, and deserve the admiration of all lovers of the old proverbial philosophy and literature.

† The extent of the emblem literature will be treated of in our Appendix, where we propose to show the sources and the authors from whom Whitney made his Choice.

What are the causes, we may ask with some misgiving as to the exact reason, that a literature has almost become forgotten, which only three centuries ago was thus popular and flourishing throughout civilised Europe? It seems to have passed away from men's knowledge: it is studied as a branch of antiquities rather than of learning, — as inscriptions disinterred from the catacombs of by-gone ages, and not as the memorials of the wit and wisdom of some of the foremost scholars of Italy, France, Spain, Germany and the Netherlands.

We have here a perplexity which at first we find it difficult to unravel. The early emblem-books delighted the literati of their age; they were patronised by popes, emperors and kings; they were illustrated with a superabundance of artistic skill, and remain unsurpassed even in modern times for beauty of execution. Their spirit became so diffused among all ranks of the people as to call for translations into six or eight languages, and for imitations wherever they were known. Now, though some of them within a century numbered more than fifty editions, and nearly all of them were reprinted, they awaken a simple stare of wonder if perchance a student of typographical antiquities ventures to name them even to well-educated men.

Paolo Giovio, Freitag.

Sketch of Emb. Lit., by J. B. Yates, p. 22.

The tide of modern thought bears onward freightages of a very different kind: they are the cargoes of useful knowledge, scientific or statistical it is called, — available for competitive examinations, — rich in illustrations of history and the economic calculus for the senate or the courts of law, and "studiisque asperrima belli," bristling with whatever can advance the pursuits of war. But our great-grandfather's literary recreations, like our great-grandfather's portraits, are consigned to darker shades than even Dante's limbos of oblivion; and all persons are looked upon as dreamers of inutilities, and consequently of vanities, who endeavour again to bring into light works which Sidney did not despise, which Spenser imitated, and which Shakespeare applied to the purposes of dramatic art.

Æneid i. l. 14.

Whitney, p. 197. Merchant of Venice, Pericles, &c.

Without any invidious comparisons, however, we have not far to seek for a sufficient reason why the old emblem writers have been almost forgotten. The best of them, the founders and early masters in this school of poetry wedded to pictorial embellishments, excelled as Latinists, and sometimes ran wild amidst the conceits which Latin is so fitted to express. Their later imitators in the modern languages, without generally possessing their depth or their brilliancy, have followed them especially in quaint fancies, and thus have repeated and magnified their faults. Hence, as Latin was more and more disused among scholars, and as the modern languages, under skilled and vigorous cultivators, threw aside mere witticisms and affectations, men's minds grew beyond the pleasures of tracing out resemblances between pictures and mottoes; and, with a truth laid down or a proverb uttered, gave the preference to seeing it illustrated from examples within their own knowledge to having it decked out in an obsolescent language, with imaginative parallels between emblem or symbol and the actual thoughts they were intended to shadow forth.

I do not suppose that, among the most enthusiastic lovers of the old literature, there are any who desire a restoration of the very ideas and modes of expressing them, of the very fancies and fanciful delineations which characterised the sixteenth century. We could not endure to have even a second Chaucer or a second Spenser. Dante risen from the dead, or Petrarch revivified by the smiles and graces of the veritable Laura, would be repellent to the modern culture. We honour them and value them as they are and were, and their memorials we would not allow to perish; but Cœur de Lion would have been as out of place on the plains of Waterloo, or Miles Standish "the brave soldier of Plymouth" as incongruous at Wilmington or at Richmond, as Alciat in the literary saloons of Paris, or our own Whitney at some meeting of the Camden Society, or amid excursionists peregrinating to glorify scientific archæology.

We admit that each age has its literary leaders, who seldom indeed retain the leadership for ages in succession; but we do not add, Let them utterly fade out of men's thoughts. They did the work of their own day, and for that work we honour them: if we do not observe for them festivals of remembrance, as for the worthies of the Christian year, still, as occasion demands, what they did shall be rescued from Time's ravages, and live through another period of human regard.

CHAPTER II.

MEMOIR AND WRITINGS OF GEFFREY WHITNEY.

SECTION I. — Estimation in which he was held — Notices and Criticisms.

RENOWN wide and large enough to fill a nation's praise, it were vain to seek for Whitney's name and work; he possessed genius and learning, but has not left results that justify a very high eulogium.

It is from his native county more especially that his labours may obtain recognition, and from others, who delight in "holsome preceptes, shadowed with pleasant deuises," they may receive the approving word. During a reign remarkable for the great statesmen, warriors, and men of letters, whom it produced, and by whom it was adorned, there were many to surpass our author, but only a few who were of purer minds or of more extensive learning. His education and attainments, however, the friendships which he formed and the estimation in which he was held, entitle him to rank among the band that lend authority to the saying: "Cheshire, chief of men;" and his principal work, A Choice of Emblemes, though not the very earliest in our literature, was the first of its kind to present an adequate example of the emblem-books that had issued from the presses of Paris, Lyons, Basle and Antwerp; and it remains the first in point of intrinsic value. It may therefore, even on the ground of comparative merit, deserve reproduction, and be adduced in proof both of the author's power and of the diligence and effectiveness with which that power had been cultivated and applied.

With one of his earlier admirers we shall not be able so heartily to proclaim his excellencies as to say:*

John Allen of Baliol, Oxford.

"Begone rare worke; what though thy Author bee
Nor lord nor knight, Yet comprehendeth more
In vertuous deeds, than titles as wee see,
Which better is, than with all Midas store.
Tell Momus and old Homer's chatterers all,
Till world's end thy name shall never fall:"

Nevertheless we have something to boast of in his behalf; and it is, that in an age by no means fastidious, either in manners or in language, there is not above one passage which might not be read aloud in any circle of listeners, and not more than two or three expressions, if there are so many, to which our modern taste can legitimately object.

The estimation in which an author's writings and character were held is indeed reflected by a very flattering mirror when they come to us from the judgment of his immediate friends, and especially from the commendatory stanzas which, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, were attached, as well to a ponderous folio edition of Plato's works as to a thin duodecimo of Alciat from the press of Christian Wechel. The affection, not to name it the fondness, which his contemporaries expressed for Whitney, informs us of the regard felt for the man as well as for the author; and names of such eminence as those of Dousa, Bonaventura Vulcanius, Limbert, and Colvius, were warrants against mere adulation. Their testimony supports Anthony Wood in affirming "he was in great esteem" at Leyden "among his countrymen for his ingenuity."

Jan Dousa, whom for learning and patriotism William the Silent appointed governor of Leyden and curator of its university, writes to the following purport "On the Emblems of Geffrey Whitney:"

Introduction to Whitney's Emblems.

* Lines in manuscript from major Egerton Leigh's copy of Whitney, which also contains similar stanzas by the same writer. This copy belonged to a John White "Anno Domini 1683," and then passed into the possession of a William White, to whom there are two manuscript memorials:

"William White his hand
So veri a roge as ani in the Land," and

"William White His Name and Pen, God bless king William and all his men."

"Here Emblems by their charms o'ercome writings of every kind,
And here Euphrosyne has mingled useful things with sweet;
So when on floors of marquetry the various figures meet,
They hold the eyes entranced, and discipline the mind.
Thus witnesses Sambucus, — thus Junius testifies,
And Alciatus, who hath borne the palm in this emprise.
Now Emblems, here out-traced by hands of finest skill,
In their rich lures all writings else outvie;
And as Sambucus, Junius, Alciatus never die,
So thou, thy work, O Whitney, shalt with growing honours fill."*

The name Geffrey, common to Whitney and to Chaucer, naturally suggested a comparison, especially at a time which preceded the full light of Spenser's genius, and when in reality no one else had arisen among our poets who had his native language more under command, or who could with equal grace express in it the sentiments which had first of all been clothed in a foreign garb. Hence we have the stanzas of Bonaventura Vulcanius of Bruges, "On the Emblems of Geffrey Whitney, who bore the name of England's great poet in the old time, Geffrey Chaucer:"†

Introduction to Whitney's Emblems, translation.

"One England bore two Geffreys, — poets both by name;
And equals too in Phœbus' power and art;
One as his country's Homer hailed by fame, —
The English Hesiod is the other's part.
And as once Victory stood with doubtful wings
Between the Mœonian and old Hesiod's song;
So, when of worthy sons glad Britain sings,
The palm between the Geffreys poises long.
Rare Chaucer's lines of gold erst Britons knew,
But Whitney kept concealed his pen's rich ore, —
Until at Leycester's word the Emblems flew Honours to gain, and honours to restore.
As shines some Indian gem encased in gold,
And graven by the workman's skill-taught hand, —

* In the Poems of Jan Dousa the younger, edited by "Gulielmo Rabo, J.U.D.," the above ode, numbered xxxiv, p. 205, is entitled "In Gulfridi Whitnei Emblemata nomine Patris;" it is therefore the son's and not the father's.

Pursue, O Whitney, titles yet untold, —
Raise to the stars thyself and native land."

A full fruition to this wish may not have been expected, but Peter Colvius,* also of Bruges, takes up the same strain :

Introduction to Whitney's Emblems, translation.

"As Emblems twine themselves within our eyes,
Traced curiously around some splendid dome ;
By art adorned, they shine in various guise,
Till 'mid the image lost, the mind doth roam ;
So, Geffrey, thou, within thy little book,
With many an image symbols dost express ;
On traceries by thy verse we gladly look,
Old sayings read, and deep thy genius bless.
The immortal deeds of heroes far shall sound,
And virtues, it is joy to bear in mind, —
Horatian hearts, and Curtius' soul renowned ; — Fabrician faith, thou, Pyrrhus ! firm didst find ;
The Decii, Junii, and Metelli brave,
Curius, and Fabius the Cunctator's fame, —
The Scipios, — bolts of war where laurels wave, —
And whom thy mind unequal is to name,
A countless host, — in virtue's brightening day,
Light for our light, thy conscious muse reveals, —
For why ? A chieftain, LEYCESTER, doth display
Beneath his care the wealth thy verse unseals :
'Tis he who here heroic gifts hath shown,
Each held by mighty princes forth to praise ;
These we admire ; and future times shall own,
A DUDLEY'S deeds deserve the choicest lays.
So shall this book on happy pinions rise,
Through lips of learned men its course to fly ;
My augury such : — high fame herself outvies,
That never WHYTNEY'S praise may fade and die."

We must remember that when the foregoing stanzas were penned, Vulcanius and Colvius were in the immediate presence of Leicester's greatness at its proudest height, and perceived in it only the promise of their country's deliverance from Spanish tyranny ; we may therefore pardon them something in the extravagance of their eulogy. Seeing only with an Englishman's eyes, Whitney's old tutor at Cambridge speaks of his pupil's labour as one scholar in that day was accustomed to speak of another, and puts forth, "A Ten-lined Ode on Geffrey Whitney's Emblems, by STEPHEN LIMBERT, an Englishman, Master of Norwich School:"

Cooper's Athen. Cantab. vol. ii. p. 61.

Introduction to Whitney's Emblems, translation.

> "Virtue's fair form and graces excellent
> Would God permit his children to behold,
> How great the passions kindled in our breasts
> For her whose beauties far outshine the gold.
> Not Venus' self, nor Dian, thrice a queen,
> Could match such glories, conquering where they shine;
> But Whitney's Emblems paint her image pure,
> Apelles-like, or Zeuxis' art divine.
> Thus our great Author doth for good provide,
> And from his hand choice gifts with men abide."

Such are some of the praises bestowed upon Whitney by men of his own day. Following the order of time we notice, before the end of the century, that he is considered worthy of being matched with the foremost of the emblem writers; for, in A Comparative Discourse of our English Poets with the Greeke, Latine, and Italian Poets, thus is it maintained: "As the Latines have these emblematists, Andreas Alciatus, Reusnerus and Sambucus, so we have these, Geffrey Whitney, Andrew Willet and Thomas Combe." We have here a record which was given to the public within a few years after the Choice of Emblemes had been written. In 1612 Peacham's Minerva Britanna "was sent abroad;" and the author avers it to be, "whether for greatnes of the chardge, or that the Invention is not ordinarie: a Subiect very rare." He goes on to say: "For except the collections of Master Whitney and the translations of some one or two else beside, I know not an Englishman in our age that hath published any worke of this kind: they being (I doubt not) as ingenious, and happy in their invention, as the best French or Italian of them all." His defence of his country sounds very like a commendation of Whitney: "They terme vs Tramontani Sempii, Simple and of dull conceipt, when the fault is neether in the Climate, nor as they would have it, in the constitution of our bodies, but truely in the cold and frozen respect of Learning and artes, generally amongst us; comming far shorte of them in the iust valewing of well-deseruing qualities."

Probably the next notice of Whitney, though without a date, is in some manuscript stanzas in major Egerton Leigh's copy* of the Emblems, to which reference has already been made, p. xxvii.

John Allen of Baliol, Oxford.

"Geffry thy name subscribed with thy pen,
Extractinge honor from the noblest men;
ffor by thy Emblems thou dost moralize ffram'd Poems, fitted for all human eyes,
Reflectinge on the naturall state of man,
Enviinge at none, assistinge whome he cann;
Yealdinge such frutfull raritYes that all
Which Whitney knew may wittely him call
Honor'd of men; what can theare more be said
In givinge due, wheare due ought to be paid."
"Whearfore like momus 'gainst him do not cry,
Though WHITNEY'S dedd His name shall never dye.
Sic cecinit Joh'es Allen."

A long oblivion however rested on the author for whom such renown had been prophesied. For nearly two centuries, except to a very few, his name was so little known that it does not occur in some of the larger biographical dictionaries, nor in the common literary histories of Elizabeth's reign; but from the evidence adduced it is certain he was regarded by his contemporaries as an author of considerable attainments and genius. His Emblems are not often to be met with entirely perfect, and his Fables and Epigrams, if ever they existed, are not found, I believe, in the most curious and extensive of libraries. In Belgium, the country where its printer (Plantin) lived, it is more rare than even in England.†

As, Aiken's Biog. Dict.

* The words, "thy name subscribed with thy pen," seem to intimate that this was a presentation copy; unfortunately the copy is imperfect, so that the fact cannot be verified.

† During the summer of 1863 I diligently inquired in the public libraries of Brussels, Ghent, Bruges and Antwerp, and did not meet with a single copy. And in the present summer of 1865 I have renewed my researches through the public, and some valuable private, libraries in Rotterdam, the Hague, Leyden, Haarlem and Amsterdam: but, though I found emblem-books of great rarity, as the German edition of Sebastian Brant's Fool-freighted Ship, in the Royal Library of the Hague, no copy of Whitney's Censur. Lit. v. p. 233.

An eminent critic of the emblem literature, Samuel Egerton Brydges, remarks: "I have every reason to suppose that this curious work is of the greatest rarity, which may be accounted for in some degree by its having been printed abroad; and it is very rarely (from what cause I am unable to conjecture) that a perfect copy is to be met with in this country. I refer the reader to Herbert's Ames for some account of it; in addition to which I beg to observe, that many of the woodcuts, with which each page is adorned, display considerable ingenuity in design, and great excellence in point of execution."

Gen. Hist. of Printing, p. 1695.

The ingenuity and excellence thus praised are comparative, not in reference to the triumphs of higher art, but when placed beside the other emblem publications of the age: and being thus judged, there are none which surpass Whitney in typographical merit, or which give a truer representation of that school of literature to which he belongs.

One at least of our modern writers very prettily sets forth the estimation which he entertained for Whitney: "We have known," he says, "those whose boyish days have been made more agreeable by the emblems of Whitney, who could recollect the different prints, their situation, the details, the whole, to their then delighted minds, beautiful pictures, which adorn that most ancient preceptor in emblematic art. But the emblems of Whitney and of Quarles have given place to meaner efforts of art, both of the pen and pencil; gaudy silly prints, and sillier illustrative verses, now occupy the juvenile library. Alas! emblems have faded, Retrospective Review, vol. p. 124.

Emblems was forthcoming; to not more than two persons was his name known, and only one had ever seen his work. A similar statement may be made respecting the cities in Belgium before mentioned; and in addition, respecting the University Library of Louvain, — the fine old library "de l'Abbaye du Parc" near Louvain, — the extensive and curious collection made by M. Van der Haeghen of Ghent, — and that richly-stored treasure-room "du Grand Seminaire" at Bruges, where but for the depredators of the French revolution would now be found in greater number the choice specimens of the skill and loving labour which was bestowed on classic and christian books. Here was shown me an emblem-book in manuscript, excellently illuminated, and in workmanship probably of the thirteenth century, "De Volucribus, sive de tribus Columbis," i.e. Concerning Birds or the three Doves, by Hugo de Foliato, prior of Saint Laurence at Amiens. Many birds of many kinds are depicted, as the Hawk, the Sparrow, the Pelican and the Ostrich — their properties supposed or real pointed out, and their emblematical significations given. One of the more curious illustrations is the Cedar-tree, where, as the expression runs, the birds "nidificant" in the branches.

and their poetry decayed; and, as we have no hopes to resuscitate them, all we can do is to embalm their memory, and adorn them with a wreath of their own flowers."

The reviewer then weaves his garland for Alciatus, Whitney and Withers. The whole of the fine fable of Cupid and Death exchanging arrows is presented as "at once beautiful and simple;" and the writer adds: "We shall extract a few emblems from this rare book, not, however, on account of its rarity, but the intrinsic merit of the compositions. There is a freshness about the early writers of our country, not so much, however, in the thought itself, as in the simple manner in which it is conveyed; an almost child-like simplicity of expression, as appropriate as it is artless, which has an irresistible charm for us. Their's seems the language in which Nature herself would unfold her beauties and her verities. It gives even the appearance of novelty, as well as strength and propriety, to the thought, and never bears the marks of effort, or constraint."

Retrospective Review, vol. ix. pp. 124, 128. Whitney's Emb. pp. 132, 133.

A few selections are then made by the reviewer; one, addressed to MILES HOBART, Esq., "The sound conscience is a brazen wall;" one, to Sir WILLIAM RUSSELL, Knight, "The name of the brave is immortal;" and a third, "to EDWARDE PASTON, Esquier," "The mind not the wealth." Of this last, for its general excellence, we subjoin the first stanza:

Whitney's Emb. pp. 67, 193 and 198.

"IN christall towers, and turrets richlie sette
With glittering gemmes, that shine against the sonne:
In regall roomes of Jasper, and of Jette,
Contente of minde, not alwaies likes to wonne:
But often times, it pleaseth her to staye
In simple cotes, clos'de in with walles of claye."

Dibdin's notice of our author is in close union of sentiment with the Retrospective Review. "Why has my Philemon," he asks, "forgotten to mention the 'Choice of Emblems' of Geffrey Whitney? Had he seen the delectable copy of that amusing book in the possession of my friend Mr. Bolland, it would have made an impression upon his mind, at least of no quickly-perishable nature. Whitney printed his copious quarto in 1586 at Leyden 'In the House of Christopher Plantyn,' by his son-in-law Raphelengius; and this is probably the only English book which Dibdin's Bibliog. Decam. vol. i. p. 275.

owes its existence to the matrices and puncheons of the immortal Plantyn.* I wish it were better executed — for the love I bear towards the memory of that great typographer: but the embellishments are generally indifferent, and almost all of them are copies of what had appeared in previous publications, especially in Paradin."

See Appendix, chap. i.

As will afterwards be shown, this last statement is far from being correct. Indeed there is occasionally a superficialness in Dibdin which detracts considerably from our entire trust to his authority. He is a perfect bibliolater of old books, especially if they be beautiful as well as rare, and describes them as if he would have his hearers under the same enchantment with himself; but he does not always discriminate the materials out of which the worshipped idols are made, nor remember that an exact judgment is of far greater value than an admiring veneration.

History of Cheshire, vol. iii. p. 230.

Ormerod's account of Whitney is chiefly taken from Anthony Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses and from Dibdin's Decameron. He decides that "the Choice of Emblemes is indebted for its celebrity more to the beauty of its embellishments than to its matter." "The subjects," he adds, "are chiefly treated in couples of stanzas (but the form and length of the verses is varied occasionally), and some of them are inscribed to his relatives and friends."

Proceedings of Liverpool Phil. Society, 1849, p. 33.

Our choice of remarks upon Whitney we will terminate with those of the late Joseph Brooks Yates, esq. "It was only towards the close of the sixteenth century that any English writers turned their attention to the class of composition now under

See "Annales de l' Imprimerie Plantinienne par MM. De Backer et Ch. Ruelens," première partie, Christophe Plantin, 1555-1589, pp. 287, 288. Bruxelles 1865.

* In this conjecture Dibdin and Mr. J. B. Yates are slightly mistaken; for in the year 1585, the year before Whitney's Emblems appeared, the following work was issued from the same press: and when the treasures of the Plantin Library at Antwerp, so long hidden, shall be revealed, as probably they will be during the next year, then other English works may become known as printed by Plantin: "The Explanation of the true and lawfull Right and Tytle of Anthonie, the most excellent prince, the first of that name King of Portugall, concerning his warres againste Phillip, king of Castile for the recouerie of his Kingdom. Translated into English, and conferred with the French and latine copies. Leyden, in the printing house of Christopher Plantyn. 1585."†

In the absence of contrary evidence there is some probability that this translation was Whitney's work. The Latin edition was printed in 1583, and 1585 marks the time when Whitney's connection with Plantin and Rapheleng existed, or was commenced.

review. In the year 1586 Geoffrey Whitney, a native of Nampt-wich in Cheshire, published at Leyden (where he was then residing) his 'Choice of Emblems,' printed by Christopher Plantyn, and probably the only English book which owes its existence to the types of that celebrated printer. Its merit is derived more from its being the first publication of a Book of Emblems which had appeared in our language, than from the excellence of the verses, which are for the most part translations from the Latin authors whose works we have been considering. Most of the engravings also are from the same Blocks as they had employed.* The Book is inscribed to the Earl of Leycester, lately made Governor of the Low Countries, and many of the Emblems are dedicated† to Cheshire Gentlemen."

Having set forth the opinions of various writers respecting Whitney and his works, I reserve, in some degree, my own, until I have told what I have to tell respecting his family and himself.

SECTION II. — The Whitneys of Herefordshire and Cheshire.

VERY question as to the ancient pedigrees of families, especially when decay has followed comparative wealth and distinction, is generally accompanied by doubts remaining to be solved, and by inaccuracies almost unavoidable. Such there are, and probably ever will be, in any memoir of Geffrey Whitney or of the members of his race.

The name itself, as applicable to a family, like a vast number

* Through researches made in various libraries, I have been enabled to show fully, if not completely, from what authors and from what editions of their works the engravings in Whitney have been borrowed. This subject will be found treated of in my Appendix, chap. i., with some brief notice of the artists by whom the woodcuts were produced.

† Also to members of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, to various clergymen and preachers, and to other persons of station and repute, whom Whitney counted among his patrons or friends. Several of his Leyden friends are also introduced. Ames remarks: "Many of the very neat wooden cuts, and verses, are inscribed to the greatest men of the age, both here and abroad." Typogr. Antiq. p. 554, ed. 1749.

of other proper names, was first given to a place. The Domesday-book mentions Witenie, i.e. Whitney, as being in Elsedune hundred in the county of Hereford. Other places in other counties bear the same name; but it does not follow that the resident owners of the land, though bearing that name, are of the slightest affinity in blood.

Duncumb, vol. ii. p. 153. Lysons' Cheshire, vol. ii. p. 473.

Of the gens, or family, to which Geffrey Whitney belonged, there appear to have been two principal branches: the elder settled at Whitney in Herefordshire, and possessing other estates within the county; and the younger having their homestead at Coole Pilate in the parish of Acton, near Nantwich, in Cheshire. Both branches however are of considerable antiquity, and intermarried with the leading families of their respective neighbourhoods.

Athenæ Oxon.

Anthony Wood favours the notion that Geffrey Whitney, the emblematist, was closely allied to the Herefordshire family; but, if by close alliance be meant immediate relationship, this notion is unsupported by adequate testimony. General tradition, historical evidence, and family pedigrees show the Cheshire Whitneys to have been of an independent stock for several generations.

Duncumb's Herefordshire, vol. ii. p 153.

The original Whitneys derived their name from their place of residence: they were — Eustace de Whitney, or Roger, or Baldwin de Whitney, as the christian name might be. On the confines of Herefordshire, a little north of the point where the county touches upon Radnor and Brecknock, — that was their cradle. Here the lovely Wye enters into England, and its first work is to flow between the parishes of Whitney and Clifford. On the bank to the north was formerly the castle of Whitney, one of the Welsh border strongholds, now represented by a group of mounds and also by Whitney-court, the residence of the present proprietors.

The parish church of Whitney is about four miles from the Hay in Brecon, and seventeen miles from Hereford. The parish contains nearly 1500 acres, the chief owners being Tomkyns Drew, esq., and the Rev. Spenser Phillips. In the old time it was a portion of the long-stretching debatable ground, within which were one hundred and forty-one little lordships, often at war with each other, and "amenable only to their several feudal chiefs." It was not included in either of the three adjoining counties, until in 1535 — by act of parliament for the incorporation of England and Wales — Huntington, Clifford, Winforton, Eardesley, and Whitney were united into the hundred of Huntington. That act serves to designate both the situation of the parish and the condition of the family. As a parish Whitney was protected and oppressed by one of those castles, like Grosmont, Skeafrith and White-castle, not to mention Ragland, which in their pride of state were of far more importance than the border peels or towers in the north of England.* As a family the Whitneys were a superior class of Wat Tinlings, doing perpetual battle in their own behalf, and, except when it suited their purposes, bidding defiance to right and law.

Penny Cyclop. vol. xii. p. 153.

In the earlier times, when Bohuns, Mortimers, and the bishops of Hereford convulsed the whole country, and overshadowed even the royal sovereignty, little trace of the Whitneys appears upon record; yet, in A.D. 1306, a Eustacius de Whyteneye was knighted at the same time with a Corbet, a Lacy, and a Marmyon; and previous to that the same Eustace, in 1277 and 1280, acted as patron of the living of Pencomb, and in the latter year presented a Roger de Whitney. In 1342 W. D. de Witenie was the incumbent; in 1353 Baldwin de Whitney; and after 1378 Eustacius Whitney. The patrons of this living at various times, from 1353 to 1590, were, Robert de Whitney, 1353; Baldwin de Whitney, 1357; Robert Whitney, knt., 1419 and 1428; Robert Whitney, 1539; then the Crown, during the minority of a Robert Whitney; and again in 1567, a Robert Whitney, knt.; and lastly James Whitney, knt., in 1590.

The Robert Whitney of the parliament of 1 Elizabeth had "receaued the honorable Ordre of Knighthode in the tyme of the reigne of Queene Mary," and his crest, we are informed, was the head of an ox; but another sir Robert Whitney, with the same crest, is recorded to have been "dubbed at wynesore" after 1566 and before 1570. From there being a sir James Whitney, knt., of Herefordshire, in 1574 (16 Elizabeth), it may be conjectured that the second of the two sir Robert Whitneys, "dubbed" so near together, was of the Cheshire family, and brother to the "Master John Whitney" on whose death Roger Ascham wrote a lamentation, "which was afterwards translated by Kendall, and published in his Flowers of Epigrammes (12mo 1577, fol. iii. b)." "This was, perhaps, our author's (Geffrey Whitney's) uncle," so Philip Bliss supposes, "as Ascham, or rather his translator, speaks of his dying young:"

> "Yong yeres to yeeld suche fruite in courte
> Where seede of vice is sowne,
> Is some tyme redde, in some place seen,
> Amongst vs seldome knowne."

It must however be remembered that we possess nothing of certainty on this point. We know that our author was of Cheshire birth, and if "Master John Whitney" was Geffrey's uncle, he probably was also Cheshire born, and so would the second sir Robert Whitney his brother be.

As a matter of course the name Whitney occurs in the lists of Gent. Mag. 1847, p. 484.

* It may be mentioned that this sir James Whitney, knt., in 1584 and 1585 sought in marriage the hand of Barbara countess of Leicester.

gentlemen in the commission of the peace for Herefordshire; as temp. Elizabeth, Eustace Whitney; about 1673 Thomas Whitney of Whitney;* in 1799 James Whitney of Norton Canon, related to the family of Whitney-court. Duncumb's Herefordshire, vol. i. pp. 102, 113, 114, 116, 119.

The sir Robert Whitney, knt., of king James's and of Charles's reign, had four sons who all died without issue, and four daughters to whom the estate descended. They all married and enjoyed shares in the property. Robert Rodd, the only son and heir to Thomas Rodd, married Hannah Whitney, one of the four daughters, and conveyed her share to Robert Price of Foxley, by whom it was sold to William Wardour.

William Wardour acquired the rest of the estate, and built the present Whitney-court, and also in 1740 Whitney church. The former church had been swept away by an overwhelming flood of the river Wye, and of the old monuments only one was spared, that to the memory of Williams of Cabalva in the neighbourhood, who married into the Whitney family.

Mrs. Bourne held the property from William Wardour, and left it to her godson, the grandfather of the present owner Tomkyns Drew, esq., and of his brother the Rev. Henry Drew, rector of the parish.

In passing from the Whitneys of Herefordshire to those of Cheshire, we may refer again to the two sir Robert Whitneys of Mary's and of Elizabeth's reigns. According to "Armes in Cheshire after the maner of the Alphabeth," we do not ascertain what the Whitney's crest was, only their shield; neither have we evidence that the Hereford and Chester branches of the same stem bore different cognizances; the argument therefore is inconclusive which maintains that, because the same crest is assigned King's Vale Royal, p. 111.

* Probably to the same family is to be assigned John Whitney, the author of a very rare book; Genteel Recreation, or the Pleasure of Angling, a Poem, with a Dialogue between Piscator and Corydon. 12mo. 1700. There was a rev. George Whitney, instituted in 1807 to the rectory of Stretford, Herefordshire, who died in 1836. I have read somewhere that a captain Whitney was a companion of sir Walter Raleigh, and of the name a lieutenant fought at Worcester on the royalists' side. If Whitney the highwayman was a member of the family, it would be but an outbreak of the old spirit of the border chieftains. His exploits are narrated in "The Jacobite robber. Account of the famous life and memorable actions of captain J. Whitney." London 1693, 4to. Gent. Mag. 1836, p. 438.

to each of the sir Robert Whitneys in question,—they were both of the Herefordshire family. Besides the christian names of the heads of the Hereford Whitneys, except at the very beginning of Elizabeth's reign, are James and Eustace, James being a knight; and among the Cheshire Whitneys of the same period we find one Robert, if not two; namely, Robert Whitney of Coole, mentioned in the Visitation of Chester in 1580, and by the Emblems, p. 91, in 1586,—and Robert Whitney, returned to parliament in 1585 as member for Thetford, when Geffrey Whitney was at Yarmouth in the same county. The probability then is, that the knight Robert of Mary's reign was of Herefordshire, and the knight Robert of Elizabeth's reign of Cheshire; in fact of the same family as that to which our emblematist belonged—the brother of one Geffrey, the father of another, and the uncle of a third.

The head of an ox, as in our frontispiece, being assigned to the two knights Robert Whitney, it may be considered as the recognised badge of the families, and therefore is appropriately introduced,* as the emblem of steady and honourable industry, to symbolize our author's genius and labours. The autograph below the print was furnished me by an eminent investigator of old documents, Mr. T. W. Jones of Nantwich, with the assurance that it is authentic and genuine,† from a signature of the same date with the Emblems, but by which of the three cotemporaneous Geffrey Whitneys of Nantwich is not ascertained.

At length we come to treat more particularly of the Cheshire Whitneys; they were established in the county, and at Coole Pilate, a township in the wide-spread parish of Acton near Nant-

They have been re-arranged to suit a title-page, and are merely a fancy of the editor's.

† Of Whitney's autographs we present an unquestioned one from a book which once belonged to him, Paradin's Devises Héroïques. A curious paper in Notes and Queries, "Autographs in Books," signed H. C. W., gives the following: "2. Oclandii Anglorum Prœlia. London 1582, 12mo. At the bottom of the title-page occurs (in MS.) 'G. Whytney, Cestrensis;' at the top the motto, 'Constanter et syn . . . .' (the rest is missing)." "I never saw his handwriting before. It would seem from this specimen that he was a native of Chester." On this Dr. Edward F. Rimbault remarks, "This old poet was certainly a native of Cheshire," and cites Whitney's Emblems, p. 177.

wich, almost as soon as those of Herefordshire were upon the Welsh border. "The manor" of Coole Pilate, say the Lysons, writing in 1810, "which was anciently parcel of the barony of Wich-Malbank, is now the property of Lord Kilmorey: in this township were two halls, with considerable estates annexed, one of which belonged to the Whitneys, who became possessed of it in the reign of Richard II. and had a seat there for many generations: this estate was purchased in 1744 of Mr. Hugh Whitney, by whose death the family is supposed to have become extinct.* The purchaser was Mr. John Darlington, whose daughter brought it in marriage to Henry Tomkinson esq. of Dorfold, the present proprietor: the hall is occupied by a farmer."

A.D. 1377-1399.

The Vale Royal of England testifies to the fact which the Lysons record. It describes where the brook Combrus, from which Combermere has its name, "meeteth shortly with the Water of Weever, about Broomhall a great Township," "near whereunto is scituate a Demean of the Whitneys, called the Mannour of Cole Pilate."

King's ed. 1656, pt. ii. p. 65.

This manor, in the parish of Acton, was the homestead of the family; and here or in the neighbourhood they long dwelt. Their alliances show them to have been of consideration in Cheshire in the old time. About the reign of Henry VII. Anne, daughter of John Brooke of Leighton, in Nantwich hundred, became the wife of Thomas Whitney of Coole. She was the aunt to the Richard Brooke, esq., who "Purchased from the King the Mannor of Norton with its Members and Appurtenances." †

* In speaking of the extinction of the Cheshire Whitneys, the Lysons are not entirely correct. Towards the end of last century, Mr. Silas Whitney, also a poet, or writer of verse, from the neighbourhood of Nantwich, carried on business in Knutsford as a cotton manufacturer. He was reputed to be descended from the Whitneys of Coole Pilate, and a relative of the celebrated Josiah Wedgwood. When political feeling ran high and fierce about the first French revolution, he is said to have emigrated to the United States of North America, then in their rising glory. There the name is borne by many families, among whom very probably are to be found the lineal representatives of the Cheshire Whitneys. In the county at the present time there are few persons of the same name, but their relationship, if any, to the emblematist is not claimed by them, nor ascertained.

† Among the Cheshire Records of Mr. T. W. Jones occur "the following members of the Whitney (or Whytney) family":—

The manor-house of Coole Pilate is pleasantly situated on the bank of the river Weever at a short distance from the stream, and is now occupied by a farmer. * Four daughters were the issue of this marriage: Elizabeth, wife to John Page, esq., of Eardshaw, living in 1666; Jane, to Edward Gregge, esq., of Bradley; Anne, to Cholmondeley Salmon, esq., of Coolane; and Maria, to John Millington, esq., of Millington. The son, William Massey, who died in 1668, married Dorothy, daughter of George Cotton of Combermere, esq. Thus some of the Whitney blood must be flowing in the veins of very many of the gentry of Cheshire.

mere, very picturesque. Here and there, by the rough road-side to the manor-house and close to it, are a few oaks, each of which numbers up centuries of life; and they are the only unquestionable relics of the age when Whitney the poet, in the boyhood of which he writes so tenderly, played and rambled with his brother Brooke, and his sisters Isabella a poetess, and Mary and Ann, in the fields and pretty country around.*

This homestead, or some other in the neighbourhood, it is most probable was the birthplace of our Geffrey Whitney; though some lines in the Poems of his sister Isabella, published in 1573, intimate that his father at one time of his married life lived in London, for she writes in her fantastical will:†

"To Smithfeilde I must something leaue, my Parents there did dwell." ‡

There are, however, undeniable proofs that the poet's younger years were passed at Coole Pilate or the immediate neighbourhood. The ancient grammar school at Audlem, a small country town about three miles from Coole Pilate, was of a certainty the place of his early education. He addresses the youth of that school —

"CVMBERMAIRE that fame so far commendes ;
A stately seate, whose like is harde to finde ;"

This mansion of the Cottons,* now viscounts Combermere, has been superseded by a nobler edifice ; it is in the immediate neighbourhood of Coole Pilate, and is spoken of by Whitney with fond affection :

Emblems, p. 200.

"So, thoughe some men doe linger longe away,
Yet loue they best their natiue countries ground.
And from the same, the more they absent bee
With more desire, they wishe the same to see."

He then adds, as if to certify of his youthful home :

"Euen so my selfe, throughe absence manie a yeere,
A straunger meere, where I did spend my prime.
Now, parentes loue dothe hale me by the eare,
And sayeth, come home, deferre no longer time :
Wherefore, when happe, some goulden honie bringes :
I will retorne, and rest my wearie wings."

The lines addressed to "THOMAS WILBRAHAM, Esquier," of Woodhey, in the same parish of Acton with Coole Pilate, imply familiarity with that "old English gentleman's" character, which residence in the same neighbourhood only could in that day produce. The poet says of him :

Emblems, p. 199.

"——— by proofe I knowe, you hourde not vp your store; Whose gate, is open to your frende: and purce, vnto the pore:"
"Whose daily studie is, your countrie to adorne :
And for to keepe a worthie house, in place where you weare borne."

The restoration of Nantwich from its state of ruin, consequent on the terrible fire of 1583, gave Whitney occasion for stating more explicitly the neighbourhood, if not the exact place, of his birth. The device of the phœnix, rising from its ashes, is devoted "To my countrimen of the Namptwiche in Chesshire." We may note that he says his countrimen, not his townsmen. In his autographs he styles himself, "Gulfridus Whytney Cestreshir," and "G. Whytney, Cestrensis." which Whitney most probably was born, are of too recent a date to furnish evidence of his birth or of his baptism; and those of Nantwich, which is a town and territory cut out of the middle of the ancient Acton, and intervening between it and Coole Pilate, though beginning "the first Day of Januarie in the Yeare of our Lord God one thousand, fiue hundred seuenty & tow," are also not sufficiently remote.* There exists however most satisfactory testimony, that in 1573 the family, of which Geffrey Whitney was the eldest, numbered two brothers, himself and Brooke, and four sisters, Ann Borron (married), Isabella (the poetess), and two younger "seruinge in London." "Certain familier Epistles and friendly Letters by the Auctor," Isabella Whitney, are addressed to various of her relatives; as—"To her Brother, G. W.," i.e. Geffrey Whitney.

See MS. "A Register of the Parishe of Wiche Malbanke."

"Sweet Nosgay," published 20th Oct. 1573.

"Good Brother whē a bacāt time

"But styll to friends I must appeale
(and next our Parentes deare)
You are and must be chiefest staffe, that I shall stay on heare." &c.
"Your louyng (though luck lesse)
Sister. Is. W."

It would thus appear that Geffrey at this time (1573) was residing in London, probably pursuing the study of the law, or following his profession of a jurisconsult.

Isabella also endites a familiar letter "To her Brother, B. W.," and enables us to identify him with "M. BR. WHITNEY," of the Emblems:

Emblems, p. 88.

"Good Brother Brooke I often looke to heare of your returne:
But none can tell, if you be well
nor where you do soiurne:
Which makes me feare that I shall heare your health appaired is:
And oft I dread, that you are dead or somthyng goeth amys." &c.
"Your louing Sister, Is. W."

* To the registers of Nantwich I had access through the kindness of the Rev. Andrew F. Chater, the rector of the parish.

There is too, what is especially note-worthy from its genuine sisterly goodness and quaint simplicity, presenting quite a picture of private life in the sixteenth century, "An order prescribed by Is. W. to two of her yonger Sisters seruinge in London;" one probably being in after-life M. D. Colley: *

Emblems, p. 93.

"Good Sisters mine, when I
shal further from you dwell:
Peruse these lines, obserue the rules which in the same I tell.
So shall you wealth posses,
and quietness of mynde:
And al your friends to se the same,
a treble ioy shall fynde."

Then follow six curiously-conceived, though sensible and most sisterly admonitions, in six stanzas, of from twelve to twenty lines: 1°. To obserue morning prayer; 2°. "All wanton toyes, good sisters now, exile out of your minde;" 3°. To attend to despatch of business; 4°. To be faithful in keeping secrets; 5°. To be guided by virtue; and 6°. "When master's gon to bed, your Mistresses at rest"—

"See that their Plate be safe, and that no Spoone do lacke, See Doores & Windowes bolted fast for feare of any wrack."

The advice ends with enjoining prayer:

"Good Sisters when you pray let me remembred be;
So wyll I you, and thus I cease till I your selues do see."

There is besides an epistle in seven stanzas, of six lines each,

Emblems, p. 191.

"To her sister Misteris A. B." i.e. Ann Borron:

"Because I to my Brethern wrote,
and to my Sisters two;
Good Sister Anne, you this might note, yf so I should not doo
To you, or ere I parted hence you vainely had bestowed expence."

* The mother doubtless of Mr. William Colley of Eccleston, near Chester, to whom on "the first day of December, Ao 1643," Arthur lord Capell granted a safe conduct, and from whom the present Dr. Davies of Chester is descended.

Chester Archæological Journal, vol. ii. pp. 397, 398 and 273.

This epistle contains a notice of her sister's children:

"Your Husband with your prety Boyes
God keep them free from all annoyes."

Now in 1586, when the Choice of Emblemes was published, one of these "prety Boyes" was our Geffrey's nephew, RO. BORRON; one of the "yonger Sisters" was M. D. COLLEY, to whom is devoted the device on the virtues of a wife; and "good Brother Brooke" was the person whom Geffrey names "my brother M. BR. WHITNEY," and whom he instructs in the apologue of a great heap arising from "manie little thinges." Emblems, p. 191. Emblems, p. 93. Emblems, p. 88.

And how do we know that "IS. W." is Isabella Whitney? In THO. BIR'S "commendation of the Authour," the writer of the "Sweet Nosgay" is expressly named:

"and sure my great good wyll must neuer slake
From WHITNEY: loe, herein some partie take,
For in her worke is plainly to be seene
why Ladies place in Garlands Laurell greene."

She is also acknowledged as a near kinswoman "by one: to whom shee had written her infortunate state," whatever that may have been, — probably some heart-disappointment:

"Your Letters (Cosin) scarsley seene,
I catcht into my hand:
In hope thereby some happy newes from you to vnderstand.
But whē I had suruaid the same, and waid the tenor well
A heuy heap of soroues did, mi former ioyes expel;"

and so on, for nearly fifty more lines, ending with —

"For; he doth yll deserue ye sweet, yt tasteth not ye tarte.
Your most louyng Cosyn, G. W."

This G. W., no doubt, was the same whom the very graphic lines, "In occasionem," on Fortune, designate, "my Kinsman M. GEFFREY WHITNEY." Emblems, p. 181.

Such were the Whitneys of Coole Pilate in 1573; they all survived until 1586, when others of the family connections are presented to our notice. In the Choice of Emblemes a device is dedicated "Ad Agnatum suum R. W. Coolensem," i.e. To his kinsman Robert Whitney of Coole; another, "Ad D. H. Wh. Emblems, p. 191. Emblems, p. 92.

patruelis mei F.," i.e. To Hugh Whitney son of my father's brother ; a third, "Ad Ra. W.," and may mean to Ralph Whitney ; also a fourth, "To my vncle GEFFREY CARTWRIGHTE," and may name his mother's brother, and so the mother of our poet would be a Cartwright.

Emblems, p. 166.

We have thus in some measure ascertained who were the kinsfolk of our Geffrey Whitney, emblematist, in 1573 and in 1586. We may now endeavour to inform ourselves of his probable age at either of these dates.

Sir Philip Sidney, after leaving Shrewsbury school, entered Christ church college, Oxford, in 1569, and quitted it in 1571. It would be two or three years at least previous to this, when Whitney, "born at Namptwich in Cheshire, spent some time in this University ;" for he was longer a student at Magdalen college, Cambridge, "where he had for his tutor Stephen Limbert, afterwards master of Norwich school." Now, according to information from the Rev. Augustus Jessop, head master of king Edward VI.'s school, Norwich, Limbert was appointed master in 1570: consequently Whitney must have been a member of Magdalen two or three years previously, suppose in 1567. We thus dispose of the supposition I once made, that he was a fellow student with sir Philip Sidney, and ascertain nearly the time when he entered Cambridge. In 1567, according to the usage of that day in going up to the universities, he would be not more than twenty years of age ; and thus we may consider him to have been born in 1548, or a little earlier,* near the beginning of "the happy reigne of Kinge Edward the sixt."

Athenæ Oxonienses, vol. i. p. 230, ed. 1721.

Athenæ Cantab. vol. ii. p. 23.

What studies and pursuits Whitney engaged in on leaving Cambridge are not recorded ; but from the office he once held in the corporate town of Great Yarmouth they were probably such as qualified him for the profession of the law, in which, as men of eminence, ranked several of his friends and patrons. And singular it is, that of the early emblem writers several were Athenæ Cantab. vol. ii. p. 24.

* This conclusion almost coincides with the conjecture of Ormerod, who says: "Here," in Nantwich, "also in 1545 was born John Gerarde the herbalist, most probably a collateral descendant of some of the great Cheshire families of his name; and here also about the same time GEOFFREY WHITNEY, an English poet of the reign of Elizabeth."

History of Cheshire, vol. iii. p. 230.

jurisconsults or of kindred callings. Alciat in his twenty-second year graduated as doctor of laws; Mignault, his commentator, in early manhood explained the Greek and Roman authors; John Sambucus deserved the praise of being "physician, historian, antiquary and poet;" Hadrian Junius excelled both as an able physician and a learned philologist; and Barthelemi Aneau was jurisconsult and orator.

In 1573, when Whitney had attained his twenty-fifth year, or according to Ormerod his twenty-eighth, he was no longer resident in Cheshire; nor does it appear that he had returned to his "natiue countries grounde" by 1586. The interval of thirteen years must have had a considerable portion of it devoted to various studies; for his familiarity with classic authors, with fathers of the church, and with the poets and emblem writers of the age in which he lived, and of that which preceded him, declares how diligently his life had been spent. He may not have taken a degree at Cambridge, but if not "M^r^ of Artes," as Peacham was, he could have been no dilatory student; each day left its line on the dial-plate of his life, and marked an onward course.

Minerva Britanna.

The preparation for a work like "the Emblemes" must have occupied the leisure of several years. There is about it a polish, a roundness of metre and of rhyme, which indicate, with as much certainty as if other writings of his were before us, that these are not the only verses which have flowed from his pen. Poetry no more than history can be written at one stretching forth of the hand; there are of necessity attempts and exercises, touches and re-touches, before anything of mastership is attained, and certainly before such power of translation as Whitney evinces can be put forth and upheld.

One of the emblem-books, from which Whitney made selections and of which he adopted some of the woodcuts, was printed by Plantin in 1583, but the copy of an earlier edition in French, bearing our author's autograph, is dated 1562; and we may reasonably conclude that his name was written in it before the issuing of Plantin's edition. The devices he borrowed from Paradin may therefore have had their illustrative verses composed as early as 1580, or even 1575. The verses "vppon Video & taceo, Her Maiesties poësie, at the great Lotterie in LONDON begon M.D.LXVIII, and ended M.D.LXIX," may have been written in 1568, and probably had their origin near to that date. Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia had received its full form, if not its completion, before 1582, and at any time afterwards the lines may have been penned:

Emblems, p. 197.

"What volumes hath hee writte, that rest among his frendes,
Which needes no other praise at all, eche worke it selfe comendes."

Emblems, pp. 121 and 122.

Baron Flowerdewe died in April 1586, about three weeks before the Emblems were published, but the Devises to him and to Francis Windham must have been composed some time before, and perhaps earlier than 1584, when Flowerdewe was appointed one of the barons of the exchequer, for he was an early friend, if not patron, of Whitney. So, if we pursued the subject it might appear that several of the emblems had been written and laid aside, and dedications added as the occasion served.

Foss's Judges, vol. v. pp. 407, 409, 421.

Once more, as a very large number of Whitney's devices and woodcuts are borrowed from Plantin's editions of Paradin (1562), of Sambucus (1564 and 1584), of Junius (1564 and 1585), of Alciat (1551 and 1581) and of Faerni (1583), many of his translations and accommodations from those writers may have taken place successively as these editions appeared, and the stanzas have been modified, added to or shortened, as taste or inclination prompted. The laws which rule other writers of selections would govern Whitney; his "Choice" would be made gradually, following out the advice of one of his own emblems:

Plates VII. XXIV. XIX. XXI. and XXVII.

"Althovghe thy store be small, for to beginne, Yet guide it well, and soone it is increaste;"

and so he found

"——— in time abundance springes,
And heapes are made, of manie little thinges."

For diversion or for improvement he studied the emblem writers; and it is probably but a portion of what he "englished and moralized" that appeared in print "in the house of Christopher Plantyn."

Athenæ Cantab. vol. ii. p. 23.

The first trace we have discovered of any special employment for our poet is as under-bailiff of Great Yarmouth, in Norfolk, an office similar in several respects to that of recorder in the present day. His connection with the corporation of that borough existed in 1580, but how much earlier is not evident. It was doubtless brought about either by the earl of Leicester or by some one of the various Cambridge and East Anglian friends of our author, and it continued until the year 1586. See the Yarmouth Rolls.

Sergeant Flowerdewe, in 1580, became under-steward of the borough, and Whitney probably acted as his deputy. On Flowerdewe's resignation, in 1584, the poet for a time occupied the vacant office. Pending the election of a successor, "it was ordered, in assembly, that Mr. Whitney should receive the fees of the Court for the steward, and haue the room at the Grey Friars rent free; but upon the appointment of Mr. Stubbs, in 1585, he was required to leave the room, unless Mr. Stubbs chose to retain him as his clerk." Whitney not unjustly resented this treatment, and went to law with the corporation, but the dispute was at last settled by a payment to him of 45*l.* sterling. Manship's Yarmouth, by Palmer, vol. ii. p. 339. Mr. Palmer's Letter, June 2, 1865.

The earl of Leicester, who as a commoner in 1553 represented the county of Norfolk, and had been high-steward of Great Yarmouth since the year 1572, introduced Whitney to the corporation, and endeavoured to procure for him the appointment of under-steward which Flowerdewe had held,—an office nearly corresponding to that of judge of the local courts both civil and criminal. Great dissensions were the result; the earl applied to Mr. Le Grys, member of parliament for the borough and a man of great influence, to favour Whitney, which to a certain extent he did, but at the cost of his own position; for Le Grys was accused to his constituents of having promised the office, and his faithful services to the borough for five successive parliaments being forgotten, he failed to regain his seat at the next election. Manship, vol. i. p. 65. Le Grys' Letter, Feb. 28, 1586. Manship's Yarmouth.

The fine old church of St. Nicholas, and the Elizabethan mansion* on the south quay, were doubtless often entered by

* The interior of this residence furnishes illustrations to a handsome volume, printed for private distribution by the present owner, Charles John Palmer, esq., the editor of "Manship's History of Great Yarmouth." "Domestic Architecture in England, during the reign of queen Elizabeth" is the title of the work. To its author, and to those who acted with him, we are indebted for the preservation of the town-rolls and other valuable documents. Their spirited exertions rescued the corporation a few years ago from the disgrace of selling their old records, and induced the building of a suitable muniment room for their safe keeping, where they are arranged in excellent order for reference.

In Gothic characters, and in Whitncian phrase, there are inscribed on the four Whitney; and though "The Yarmouth Vtch," or "TOWN CHEST," was "The Gift of Alice Bartlemew" to the corporation only in 1601, yet there probably reposed for many a year A Parchment Sheet of the Rolls of Great Yarmouth, dated 2 Aug. 1580, which was drawn up or indited by Whitney himself, and which is the earliest of his known compositions. Some have dignified it with the name of a work, as if it were a book or treatise; but a single long and narrow folio is the extent of this offspring of our poet's pen. It describes in Latin prose a scene in his life which may be characterized as the pic-nic of the borough officers and of their friends.

See Plates XII. and XIII.

Manship, writing not later than 1612 or 1614, and speaking of this Parchment Sheet, testifies to the "careful skillfulness, and skillful carefulness of Mr. Jeffry Whitney, (sometime the under Bailiff of this Incorporation,) to set down" "touching the said sand called Scratby Sand;" "in Latin learnedly recorded, beginning 'porro secundo die,' &c. Thus in English: Moreover, on the second day of August this present year," 1580, &c.

Palmer's Manship, vol. I. pp. 105, 106.

It appears that about the 20th year of Elizabeth (1578) one of the sand-banks off Yarmouth became dry land, which from a small village on the shore received the name of Scratby Island. It "was so much elevated above high-water mark that grass and other vegetables grew and sea-fowls built thereon; and in the summer season many of the inhabitants of Yarmouth usually went thither for recreation; some feasting, bowling and using other pastimes there, according to their different inclinations. But on the Second Day of August 1580, a very elegant entertainment was prepared by the bailiffs for a select company of gentlemen, whose names are inserted in the court-roll of that year, with an account of the place and transactions of that day, by the learned and ingenious Mr. Jeffery Whitney, sub-steward to the corporation at that time."

The historian of Norfolk tells us "the bailiffs, with a respectable company of gentlemen, burgesses, mariners, &c., went down to take formal possession of this spot by the name of Yarmouth Island, where they all dined and spent the day in festivity."* The excursion doubtless was pleasant enough, with knights and men learned in the law of the company, and "some odd quirks and remnants of wit" were broken at the joyous time. "But behold, exclaims Swinden, "the instability and uncertainty of all earthly acquisitions!" In 1582, when the lord of the adjoining manor, sir Edward Clere, had put in his claim, and he and the corporation of Yarmouth had commenced a law-suit in support of their respective rights, "the sea put in a more powerful claim," and "by a strong easterly wind and tide" swept the island away, "and the place became main sea" and "left not a wreck behind" whereby "to keep alive the foolish contest." †

Blomefield, vol. v. p. 1694. Swinden, p. 690.

Great Yarmouth was excellently well situated for intercourse with Holland and Belgium, then as now great centres of emblem art; and during the eight or ten years of his connection with the East Anglian borough, Whitney would have frequent opportunities of holding correspondence with, or even of visiting, the learned men who distinguished Antwerp or Leyden by their residence. We may not be able to determine how early his acquaintance with the literati of the Netherlands commenced, nor to what date it was continued; but it certainly, from the very nature of the case, must have been of some years standing when his Emblems were published. In reward of the bravery and fidelity of its citizens, during the memorable siege of 1573, Leyden obtained from William the Silent the establishment of its university in 1575. A fast friend of Whitney, Jan Dousa the elder, was the first who presided over the newly-founded academy; another friend, Bonaventura Vulcanius, was the Greek

* The names recorded are forty-five in number. Among them, the bailiffs Ralph Woolhouse and John Giles, sir R. Woodhouse, knt., Edmund Flowerdewe, esq., sergeant at law, Mr. Charles Colthorpe, steward of Yarm, Mr. William Harebome, Mr. Jeffery Whitney, &c. The whole account of the visit, as if it had been a very solemn festivity, concludes with a doxology: "Soli Deo honor et gloria in æva sempiterna. Amen."

† In a note from R. H. Inglis Palgrave, esq., of Great Yarmouth, I am informed that about a week before, the sandbank which once constituted Yarmouth or Scratby Island was again for a day or two raised to the surface of high water. Were the upheaval permanent would the lawsuit be revived that has lain dormant for 285 years?

professor at the same time; and Justus Lipsius for thirteen years, until 1590, filled the chair of history. Raphalengius too, by whom the Choice of Emblems was imprinted, had taught Greek in Cambridge when Whitney was a student, or shortly before; and thus we have all the elements of the acquaintance and friendship between our poet and several of the eminent men by whom Leyden was adorned.

See Annales de l'Imprimerie Plantinienne, Bruxelles, 1865.

In the year 1555 Plantin established his printing-house in Antwerp, and from 1562 when "Les Devises de Claude Paradin" were published by him down to 1590, there was a continual succession of emblem works in Latin, French and Flemish. Four editions of Paradin appeared, five of Sambucus, four of Faerni, one of Freitag, eight of Hadrian Junius, and five of Alciatus. Out of all these Whitney had taken his "Choice;" so that it was but natural, considering what relations he had established with Leyden, that his Emblems should be printed in that city.

At the end of November 1585 Whitney was in London, where he penned "the Epistle Dedicatorie" to his patron, but on the 4th of May 1586 he is found "at Leyden in Hollande" commending the Emblems to his readers. May be we have no absolute authority for the assertion; but here it seems that he busied himself in literary pursuits, and passing out of the immediate knowledge of his countrymen formed one in the bands of the learned whom the new university and the new printing-office of Plantin had gathered together.

If the conjecture were established, that "G. W.," the initials of the author of "AVRELIA," mean Geffrey Whitney, we could present evidence that he was writing and publishing in London in 1593; otherwise we meet with no certain mention of him as living beyond the conclusion of the sixteenth century, except it be the notice in Peacham's Minerva Britanna, p. 172. This we may interpret as implying that Whitney personally* gave consent to Peacham's use of the device of Love and Death. If this be a sound conjecture, then Whitney was surviving in the year 1612, at the age of 64; it depends however on the words, "cum illius veniâ Ab Authore." Should we understand them as merely the idiom for "begging his pardon," the evidence is inconclusive; but if we give the full meaning, "with permission for it from the author," then doubtless Whitney was living in the year 1612.

* "Hoc idem habet Whitnæus, quod bene cum illius veniâ Ab Authore etiam mutatus sum."

The year of his death equally with the year of his birth remains unsolved. His writings are his only monument, and neither stone nor line is known to record his passage to the immortality in which he believed.

SECTION III. — The Writings of Whitney — some estimate of their worth.

YEARS, as they flow, have often brought to light other writings of an author than those originally ascribed to him; but in Whitney's case there are only trifling additions by Philip Bliss and the Coopers of Cambridge to the works catalogued by Anthony Wood. We will take them in their order as they are presented in the Athenæ Cantabrigienses and Athenæ Oxonienses:

See vol. ii. pp. 23, 24. See vol. i. p. 230 ed. 1721.

"1. Account in Latin of a visit to Scratby Island, off Great Yarmouth 2 August 1580. Translated in Manship's History of Great Yarmouth, 106."

Aided by Mr. C. J. Palmer, I referred to this "Account in Latin," and found it simply an entry, on a single scroll, in the Town Records. The names of the company who were present at the festivity are appended. Swinden's History gives the original Latin, which we reproduce in photo-lithography.

Plates XII. and XIII.

"2. A Choice of Emblemes, and other Devises, for the most part gathered out of sundrie writers, Englished and Moralized, and divers newly devised, by Geffrey Whitney. A worke adorned with varietie of matter, both pleasant and profitable: wherein those that please, maye finde to fit their fancies: Because herein, by the office of the eie, and the eare, the minde may reape dooble delighte through holsome preceptes, shadowed with pleasant devises: both fit for the vertuous, to their incoraging: and for the wicked, for their admonishing and amendment. Leyden (Plantyn), 4to, 1586.* Dedicated to Robert earl of Leycester from London 28 Nov. 1585, with an epistle to the reader dated Leyden, 4th May 1586. The author speaks as if this were a second edition; if so, no other is now known. A writer in the Encyclopædia Metropolitana terms this work a remarkable imitation of Alciati."

Whitney's Address to the Reader.

The Collection of Emblems "presented in writinge vnto my Lorde," constituted, I conceive, the "firste edition" of which Whitney makes mention; it was not a printed but a written edition, set forth among his friends. He afterwards added to the manuscript that had been "offred vp to so honorable a suruaighe" as that of his lordship, but he declares, "licence being obtained for the publishing thereof, I offer it heare (good Reader) to thy viewe, in the same sorte as I presented it before. Onelie this excepte: That I haue now in diuerse places, quoted in the margent some sentẽces in Latin, and such verses as I thoughte did beste fit the seuerall matters I wratte of. And also haue written somme of the Emblemes, to certaine of my frendes, to whom either in dutie or frendship, I am diuers waies bounde: which both weare wantinge in my firste edition, and nowe added herevnto."

The manuscript submitted to lord Leicester and the additional notes and Latin sentences, together with some emblems to his friends, were now set up in type and constitute the printed edition. No prior printed edition was made, and no other printed edition is known to exist besides the one which is now again set forth by the photo-lithographic process.

Athen. Oxon. vol i. p. 230, ed. 1721.

"3. Fables or Epigrams," "printed," says Anthony Wood, "much about the same time as the former, in qu. and every page hath a picture wrought from a wooden cut."

No trace has been discovered of such a work; if it exists it will probably be found in the Bibliotheca Plantiniana at Antwerp, which it is said is about to be reduced out of chaos into order by its present proprietor, M. Edward Moretus, and then to be opened to the public.* It is not unlikely that Anthony Wood has confounded the two parts of Whitney's Emblems, and treated them as separate works. Both parts contain Fables, especially from Faerni, and both parts have nearly every page ornamented with a woodcut.

Or possibly, except that Wood names the Fables and Epigrams as a 4to book, and the work about to be mentioned is a 12mo, Whitney was engaged in correcting the press for "Centum Fabvlæ ex Antiqvis Avctoribvs delectæ, et A. Gabriele Faerno Cremonensi Carminibus explicata," "Antuerpæ apud Christophorum Plantinum M.D.LXXXV." It has 100 plates from wooden blocks, many of them the very same as are used in Whitney's Emblems; and so what he simply edited may have been regarded or spoken of as his own. This however is mere conjecture.

"4. Ninety English verses in commendation of his friend Dousa's Odæ Britannicæ. 1586."

The odes were printed at Antwerp† by Plantin, in the same year with Whitney's Emblems. The commendatory English verses are interesting, from the stanza being the same as in the greater part of the Emblems. Thus:

"There needes no bushe, wheare nectar is to drinke;
Nor helpes by arte, wheare bewtie freshe doth bloome;
Wheare sonne doth shine, in vayne wee lighte the linke;
Wheare sea dothe swell, the brookes do loose their roome;
Let Progne cease, wheare Philomela singes,
And oaten pipe, wheare Fame her trompet ringes."

Athenæ Oxonienses, Bliss's ed. vol. i. pp. 527, 528.

"5. Translation of some complimentary verses to the Earl of Leycester 1586, occurring at page 53 of Dousa's Odæ Britannicæ." Bliss, vol. i. pp. 527, 528.

The degree of adulation offered to Leicester may be judged

* I must here acknowledge the very polite attention of M. baron de Borrekens, of Antwerp, a near relative of the Moretus family, in endeavouring to obtain admission for me into the library; but M. E. Moretus was absent from home and I could not await his return.

† The "Odæ Britannicæ," however, are not named in "Annales de l'Imprimerie Plantinienne, par MM. A. De Backer et Ch. Ruelens." 1865.

from the fact that when in December 1585 he removed from Delft to the Hague a series of twelve engravings was published with the title, "Delineatio pompæ triumphalis quâ Robertus Dudlæus comes Leicestrensis Hagæ Comitiis fuit receptus."

So closes the brief catalogue of Whitney's works,— meagre in comparison of his attainments and powers, but showing how a lawyer's leisure might be bestowed, or the time of a literary man employed.

Conjecture guesses, and at present it is only a guess, that another work may be attributed to our author: it is "AVRELIA: The Paragon of pleasure and Princely delights: Contayning the seuen dayes Solace (in Christmas Holydayes) of Madona Aurelia, Queen of the Christmas Pastimes, and sundry other well courted Gentlemen and Gentlewomen, in a noble Gentleman's Pallace, &c. By G. W." Device, a sweet-william, &c., as in the frontispiece. "Printed by R. Johnes,* at the Rose and Crowne, neare Holburne Bridge, 1593," 4to.

We may here, not inappropriately, subjoin a notice of the published writings of Isabella Whitney, Geffrey's eldest sister; not that they possess much literary merit or poetical beauty, but are just the outpourings of a country maiden's spirit when brought into contact with the London society of Elizabeth's reign, and will serve to carry our remarks nearer to completion.

See Plate XI.

Her principal work is entitled "A sweet Nosgay, or pleasant Posye: contayning a hundred and ten Phylosophicall Flowers, &c." After the Nosgay follow "Familyar and friendly Epistles, by the Auctor, with Replyes," all in verse. The last poem in the volume is "The Auctors (feyned) Testament before her departing;" in which she mentions the several professions and trades of London to whom the fictitious legacies are bequeathed, and the localities where they were stationed. The date of these poems is 1573.†

For extracts, see pp. xlv. et seq. of this Introductory Dissertation.

Notes and Queries, 3rd series, vol. i. p. 32.

* Richard Jones, or Jhones, or Johnes, was admitted a member of the Stationers' Company 7th August 1564; and books of his printing are found down to 1600. He printed the books of Whitney's sister Isabella, and through her may have been brought into contact with him.

† The Rev. Thomas Corser, the rector of Stand near Manchester, possesses a copy, perhaps unique, of this curious work.

Sir Egerton Brydges, bart., gives the title of another work attributed to the Cheshire poetess: it is, "The copy of a letter lately written in meeter, by a yonge Gentilwoman to her vnconstant lover; with an admonition to al yong Gentilwomen, and to all other Mayds in general to beware of mennes flattery. By Is. W. Newly joined to a Love letter sent by a Bacheler, (a most faithfull Lover,) to an unconstent and faithless Mayden. Impr. at London, by Rd. Jhones, dwelling in the upper end of Fleet lane, at the signe of the Spred Egle." 12mo. Restituta, vol. i. pp. 234, 235.

The bachelor's verses thus terminate:

"Farewell, a dieu ten thousand times,
To God I thee commend,
Beseeching Him His heavenly grace
Unto thee styll to send.

Thy friend in wealth, thy friend in woe,
Thy friend while life shall flyth me froe;
And whilst that you enjoy your breath,
Leave not your friend unto the death;
For greater praise cannot be wonne
Then to observe true love begonne."

To another work from the same press Isabella Whitney contributed some commendatory verses. This is the title: "A Plaine and Easie Introduction to practicall Musicke, Set down in forme of a dialogue, &c. By Tho. Morley, Batcheler of Musick and one of the gen. of her Maiesties Royall Chappell. Imprinted &c. 1597." "Commendatory verses by Ant. Halborne, A.B., and I. W.," folio. See Ames and Herbert's Typ. Ant. vol. ii. pp. 1039, 1051 and 1206.

To estimate the writings of Whitney by those of his contemporaries among literary men, as Sidney, Spenser and Shakespeare, would at the first view be considered a proper method of judgment; but his style, his subject, the extent of his works, are all so different from theirs, that a comparison between them would be out of place, and the conclusions we might draw wanting some of the elements of justice. It is rather by selection than by comparison that we are to look at his labours; we shall thus perceive what his power as an author really was, and have the results foreshadowed, if he had left behind more abundant evidences of a poet's work.

His dedication to Leicester, though characterized by all the diffuseness and wildness of illustration which belong to his age, nevertheless possesses much of earnestness and clear appreciation of the kind of patronage which learning then required. A passage from it will give an idea of the stately roll of the author's ideas, as a ship well laden, but needing more press of sail to urge it onward. "There be three thinges," he says, "greatlie desired in this life, that is healthe, wealthe, and fame. and some haue made question which of these is the chiefe: the sick, saieth health. the couetous, comendeth wealthe. and bothe these place good name laste of all. But they be bothe partiall iudges; for he that is of sincere and vprighte iudgement, is of contrarie opinion: Bicause that healthe, and wealthe, though they bee neuer so good, and so great, determine with the bodie, and are subiecte vnto time; But honour, fame, renowme, and good reporte, doe triumphe ouer deathe, and make men liue for euer: where otherwise the greatest Princes, in shorte time are worne out of memorie, and cleane forgotten. For, what is man in this worlde? without fame to leaue behinde him, but like a bubble of water, that now riseth, & anon is not knowne where it was."

Dedication, p. 12.

Another quotation from his address, To the Reader, will, I think, confirm the opinion that Whitney had power to become a most interesting writer of prose. If Homer, if Marcus Varro, if Cicero, if Virgil, "and diuers others whose workes weare most singuler, if they coulde not escape the bites of such Basiliskes broode: Then howe maye I thinke, in this time which is so blessed, generallie with most rare and exquisite perfection in all knowledge, and iudgement: that this slender assaye of my barren muse, should passe the pikes without pusshing at: where thousandes are so quicke sighted, they will at the first, behoulde the least iote, or tittle, that is not rightly placed." "For the nature of man is alwaies delighted in nouelties, & too much corrupte with curiousnes and newfanglenes. The fairest garden, wherein is greate varietie bothe of goodlie coulors, and sweete smelles, can not like all mennes fancies: but some gallant coulours are misliked, and some pleasant smelles not regarded. No cooke, can fitte all mennes tastes, nor anie orator, please all mennes humors: but wheare the tastes are too daintie, his cookerie shalbe controlled: and wheare the auditors are to rashe and careles in regarding, his Rethoricke shalbe condempned: and no worke so absolute perfecte, but some are resolute to reprehende."

The paraphrase of the Ode of Horace, "Sæpius ventis agitatur ingens," is equal to the best in our language: Carm. 2, Od. 10.

"THE loftie Pine, that one the mountaine growes, Emblems, p. 59.
And spreades her armes, with braunches freshe, & greene,
The raginge windes, on sodaine ouerthrowes,
And makes her stoope, that longe a farre was seene:
So they, that truste to much in fortunes smiles,
Thoughe worlde do laughe, and wealthe doe moste abounde,
When leste they thinke, are often snar'de with wyles,
And from alofte, doo hedlonge fall to grounde:
Then put no truste, in anie worldlie thinges,
For frowninge fate, throwes downe the mightie kinges."

The verse is full of power, — not a weak expression in it; the meaning is admirably brought out, and with a polish of tone in the rhymes that indicate a most musical ear.

So from Ovid he commences one of the finest of his poems, Metamorph. lib. i.

"Without justice, confusion:"

"WHEN Fire, and Aire, and Earthe, and Water, all weare one: Emblems, p. 122.
Before that worke deuine was wroughte, which nowe wee looke vppon,
There was no forme of thinges, but a confused masse:
A lumpe, which CHAOS men did call: wherein no order was.
The Coulde, and Heate, did striue: the Heauie thinges, and Lighte.
The Harde, and Softe. the Wette and Drye. for none had shape arighte.
But when they weare dispos'd, eache one into his roome:
The Fire, had Heate: the Aire, had Lighte: the Earthe, with fruites did bloome.
The Sea, had his increase: which thinges, to passe thus broughte:
Behoulde, of this vnperfecte masse, the goodly worlde was wroughte.
Then all thinges did abounde, that seru'd the vse of man:
The Riuers greate, with wyne, and oyle, and milke, and honie, ranne."

Of Anacreon's celebrated ode, which we may name The Power of Beauty, he gives a very excellent translation:

Emblems, p. 182. "WHEN creatures firste weare form'd, they had by natures lawes,
The bulles, their hornes: the horses, hoofes: the lions, teeth and pawes.
To hares, shee swiftenes gaue: to fishes, finnes assign'de:
To birdes, their winges: so no defence was lefte for woman kinde.
But, to supplie that wante, shee gaue her suche a face:
Which makes the boulde, the fierce, the swifte, to stoope, and pleade for grace."

But the exactness of his translation, when occasion demanded, may be seen in the rendering which is given to these two lines of Alciat:

Emblems, p. 133. "Quid me vexatis rami? Sum Palladis arbor, Auferte hinc botros, virgo fugit Bromium."
"Why vexe yee mee yee boughes? since I am Pallas tree; Remoue awaie your clusters hence, the virgin wine doth flee."

His power of adaptation, of taking up the thoughts of others, and of amplifying them, if not of absolutely improving them, is no less conspicuous. From Joachim Bellay's beautiful tale* we

The printer's emblem, a mulberry tree on the title-page, with "ΠΑΝ ΔΕΝΔΡΟΝ ΑΓΑΘΟΝ ΚΑΡΠΟΥΣ ΚΑΛΟΥΣ ΠΟΙΕΙ," Every good tree brings forth fine fruit. At folio 50 are the lines:

Mutarunt arma inter se Mors, atq. Cupido:
Hic falcem gestat, gestat at illa facem.
Afficit hæc animum, corpus sed conficit ille:
Sic moritur iuuenis, sic moribundus amat.

Mors thalamum sternit, sternit Amor tumulum.
Tu quoque disce tuas, Natura, innertere leges:
Si pereunt iuuenes, depereuntque senes."

Folio 48, ibid. We could not quit the Bibliothèque de l'Université à Gand without noting down the exceedingly neat epigram in the same volume of Bellay's;

CVIVSDAM CANIS.

phically, with what simplicity, with what exquisite grace are the lines of the "French Ovid" rendered and extended:

"WHILE furious Mors, from place, to place did flie,
And here, and there, her fatall dartes did throwe:
At lengthe shee mette, with Cupid passing by,
Who likewise had, bene busie with his bowe:
Within one Inne, they bothe togeather stay'd,
And for one nighte, awaie theire shooting lay'd.
The morrowe next, they bothe awaie doe haste,
And eache by chaunce, the others quiuer takes:
The frozen dartes, on Cupiddes backe weare plac'd,
The fierie dartes, the leane virago shakes:
Whereby ensued, suche alteration straunge,
As all the worlde, did wonder at the chaunge.
For gallant youthes, whome Cupid thoughte to wounde,
Of loue, and life, did make an ende at once.
And aged men, whome deathe woulde bringe to grounde:
Beganne againe to loue, with sighes and grones;
Thus natures lawes, this chaunce infringed soe:
That age did loue, and youthe to graue did goe.
Till at the laste, as Cupid drewe his bowe,
Before he shotte: a younglinge thus did crye,
Oh Venus sonne, thy dartes thou doste not knowe,
They pierce too deepe: for all thou hittes, doe die:
O spare our age, who honored thee of oulde,
Theise dartes are bone, take thou the dartes of goulde.
Which beinge saide, a while did Cupid staye,
And sawe, how youthe was almoste cleane extinct:
And age did doate, with garlandes freshe, and gaye,
And heades all balde, weare newe in wedlocke linckt.
Wherefore he shewed, this error vnto Mors,
Who miscontent, did chaunge againe perforce.
Yet so, as bothe some dartes awaie conuay'd,
Which weare not theirs: yet vnto neither knowne,
Some bonie dartes, in Cupiddes quiuer stay'd,
Some goulden dartes, had Mors amongst her owne.
Then, when we see, vntimelie deathe appeare:
Or wanton age: it was this chaunce you heare."*

* It is supposed that this tale was imitated from the CLIV emblem of Alciatus,

These examples of happy translations into simple and expressive English it would be easy to extend, but we turn to the opportunity which the treatment of the same subject gives us for comparing Whitney with his great contemporary, Spenser. The two poets were probably acquainted through their mutual friends, Leicester and Sidney. One subject which they have ventured on in common is the pretty tale from Theocritus and Anacreon, in which Cupid is described as being stung by a bee, and as flying to Venus for comfort. The superiority in point of truth, grace and simplicity of expression is, I think, decidedly with Whitney. Thus Spenser:

Spenser's Poems, Moxon's edition, p. 481.

"Nathelesse, the cruell boy, not so content,
Would needs the fly pursue;
And in his hand, with heedlesse hardiment,
Him caught for to subdue.
But when on it he hasty hand did lay,
The Bee him stung therefore:
'Now out alas, he cryde, and welaway
I wounded am full sore;
The fly, that I so much did scorne,
Hath hurt me with his little horne.'
Unto his mother straight he weeping came,
And of his griefe complayned;
Who could not chuse but laugh at his fond game,
Though sad to see him pained.
'Think now (quoth she) my son, how great the smart
Of those whom thou dost wound:
Full many thou hast pricked to the heart,
That pitty never found:
Therefore, henceforth some pitty take,
When thou doest spoyle of Lovers make.'"

Whitney gives the following neat and compact version:

Emblems, p. 148.

"As Venvs sonne within the roses play'd,
An angrie bee that crept therein vnseene,
The wanton wagge with poysoned stinge asay'd:
Whereat, aloude he cri'de, throughe smarte, and teene.

Retrospective Review, vol. ix. p. 126.

Alciati Emblem. 154.

which was written by him, according to the note by Claude Mignault, on occasion of a pestilence in Italy, when many young men died and the old generally escaped safe and uninjured. Whitney has combined thoughts both from Alciat and from Bellay.

And sought about, his mother for to finde :
To whome, with griefe he vttered all his minde.
And say'd, behoulde, a little creature wilde,
Whome husbandmen (I heare) do call a bee,
Hath prick'd mee sore alas : whereat she smil'de,
And say'd : my childe, if this be griefe to thee,
Remember then, althoughe thou little arte ?
What greeuous wounde, thou makest with thy darte."

Some peculiar expressions in their poems show that the two poets had read each other's works, at least in manuscript ; but as the expressions alluded to occur in the Faerie Queene, of which three books were published in 1590 and three in 1596, the probability is that Spenser had read Whitney's Emblems printed in 1586, the year before Spenser took up his residence at Kilcolman in Ireland. The first passage of the kind from Whitney is,

Moxon's Spenser, pp. xxix. and xliv.

Moxon, p. xxiv.

"Lo, Time dothe cut vs of, amid our carke : and care ;" Emblems, p. 199.

thus paralleled by Spenser :

He, "downe did lay
His heavie head, devoide of careful carke." F. Queene, I. c. i. s. 44.

The second is the following :

"They, doe but make a sporte, Emblems, p. 151.
His subiectes poore, to shaue, to pill and poll."

Of this there are two imitations by Spenser :

"Thereto he hath a Groome of euil guize, F. Queene, V. c. ii. s. 6.
Whose scalp is bare, that bondage doth bewray,
Which pols and pils the poore in piteous wize ;"

and

"So did he good to none, to manie ill, M. Hubberd's Tale, l. 1197.
So did he all the kingdome rob and pill."

And the third passage is :

"AN vserer, whose Idol was his goulde, Emblems, p. 169.
Within his house, a peeuishe ape retain'd :
A seruaunt fitte, for suche a miser oulde,
Of whome both mockes, and apishe mowes, he gain'd."

Of which the idea is thus given by Spenser :

"And other whiles with bitter mockes and mowes F. Queene, VI. c. viii. s. 49.
He would him scorne."

Another bond between Whitney and Spenser is in the use of emblems; which, as far as mottoes go and the adopting of the word, were inserted by Spenser in his first work, "The Shepheards Calender," published in 1579. The poem is divided into twelve parts, according to the months of the year, and to each month there is added a Poesie, i.e. a short proverb or saying, supposed to be descriptive of a person and adopted by him as his device;—such Poesies Spenser named Emblems: they had not at first any pictorial illustration, but are as much intended for it as if the pictures had been drawn and engraved. At a later time woodcuts were added, and the resemblance to an emblem-book rendered more complete.

Spenser's Works, folio edition, 1616.

Some of these poesies are from Italian, one is in English, six from the Latin, two from the Greek, and one in French. "Diggons embleme," for September, "Inopem me copia fecit," Plenty made me poor, is the saying of Narcissus, when he fell in love with his own shadow in the water; and one of Whitney's emblems is a picture of Narcissus gazing in a running stream, with the motto "Amor sui," Self-love, and the lines:

Moxon's edition, p. 387.

Emblems, p. 149.

"Narcissvs lou'de, and liked so his shape
He died at lengthe there vppon."

Colins Embleme, that for December, "Vivitur ingenio; caetera mortis erunt," i.e. Genius survives, other things are the prey of death, is also identical in spirit with one of Whitney's, "Scripta manent," Writings are permanent; or with another, "Pennæ gloria perennis," The glory of the pen never fades:

Spenser, Moxon's edition, p. 396.

Emblems, pp. 131 and 196.

"Then, what may laste, which time dothe not impeache,
Since that wee see, theise monumentes are gone:
Nothinge at all, but time doth ouer reache,
It eates the steele, and weares the marble stone:
But writinges laste, thoughe yt doe what it can
And are preseru'd, euen since the worlde began."

and again:

"——— no treasure can procure
The palme that waites vpon the pen, which euer doth indure."

We are not so rash indeed as to attempt to place Whitney on a level with Spenser,—they can scarcely even be compared together; yet where a comparison is allowable, as in subjects which they both treat of, the Cheshire poet is no unworthy competitor. Spenser is diffuse, Whitney more compressed; the one most elaborate, the other strong by his very simplicity. Take as an example the description which both give of Envy. Spenser's certainly has a coarseness which does not belong to Whitney; his power of imagination may be greater, but not the fineness of his perceptions. Thus he describes the hag:

F. Queene, V. c. xii. s. 30.

"Her handes were foule and durtie, never washt
In all her life, with long nayles over-raught,
Like puttocks clawes; with th'one of which she scratcht
Her cursed head, although it itched naught;
The other held a snake with venim fraught,
On which she fed and gnawed hungrily
As if that long she had not eaten ought:
That round about her iawes one might descry
The bloudie gore and poyson dropping lothsomely.

Her name was Envie, knowen well thereby:
Whose nature is to grieve and grudge at all
That ever she sees doen prays-worthily:
Whose sight to her is greatest crosse may fall,
And vexeth so, that makes her eat her gall.
For when she wanteth other thing to eat
See feedes on her owne maw unnaturall,
And of her owne foule entrayles makes her meat;
Meat fit for such a Monsters monsterous dyeat."

Now mark how Whitney, with less force it may be, but with more simplicity and naturalness, describes the hateful monster:

Emblems, p. 94.

"What hideous hagge with visage sterne appeares?
Whose feeble limmes, can scarce the bodie staie:
This, Enuie is: leane, pale, and full of yeares,
Who with the blisse of others pines awaie.
And what declares, her eating vipers broode?
That poysoned thoughtes, bee euer more her foode.

What meanes her eies? so bleared, sore, and redd:
Her mourninge still to see an others gaine
And what is mente by snakes vpon her head?
The fruite that springes, of such a venomed braine.
But whie, her harte shee rentes within her brest?
It shewes her selfe, doth worke her owne vnrest.

Whie lookes shee wronge? bicause shee woulde not see,
An happie wight, which is to her a hell:
What other partes within this furie bee?
Her harte, with gall: her tonge, with stinges doth swell.
And laste of all, her staffe, with prickes aboundes:
Which showes her wordes, wherewith the good shee woundes."

But Whitney, it is said, had little originality; his ideas are many of them borrowed, and his stanzas are often translations only from Latin or French or Italian authors. True; "The Choice of Emblemes" is what it professes to be, "gathered out of sundrie writers;" but the good taste, the quaint elegance, the fullness and richness of tone which his translations and adaptations evince, show that he was no common genius: and the way in which he amplifies and often improves upon the original authors, betokens an innate power, had he put it forth, of equalling the best efforts of his contemporaries.

It was only in a few instances indeed that Whitney trusted to his own invention: from fifteen to twenty at the utmost are the emblems which may be claimed for him as entirely his own. He appears to have restricted his subjects to those for which illustrations could be supplied from the Plantinian printing office, and in treating these he naturally resorted to the other emblematists who had written to the same themes. Now and then, however, he "newly devised;" and an example or two will set forth his own mind, and strength or weakness of expression.

Plate VII. "Constanter," one of the words of his own motto, "Constanter et syncere," supplied him with promptings to such thoughts as these:

Emblems, p. 129. "THE raging Sea, that roares, with fearefull sounde,
And threateneth all the worlde to ouerflowe:
The shore sometimes, his billowes doth rebounde,
Though ofte it winnes, and giues the earthe a blowe.
Sometimes, where shippes did saile: it makes a lande.
Sometimes againe they saile: where townes did stande.
So, if the Lorde did not his rage restraine,
And set his boundes, so that it can not passe:
The worlde shoulde faile, and man coulde not remaine,
But all that is, shoulde soone be turn'd to was:
By raging Sea, is ment our ghostlie foe,
By earthe, mans soule: he seekes to ouerthrowe.

And as the surge doth worke both daie and nighte,
And shakes the shore, and ragged rockes doth rente:
So Sathan stirres, with all his maine, and mighte,
Continuall siege, our soules to circumuente.
Then watchè, and praie, for feare wee sleepe in sinne,
For cease our crime: and hee can nothing winne."

The apostle's exhortation to avoid sinful anger is well paraphrased: Ephes. iv. 26.

"CASTE swordes awaye, take laurell in your handes, Emblems, p. 216.
Let not the Sonne goe downe vppon your ire.
Let hartes relente, and breake oulde rancors bandes,
And frendshippes force subdue your rashe desire.
Let desperate wightes, and ruffians, thirst for blood,
Winne foes, with loue; and thinke your conquest good."

"Veritas inuicta," Unconquered truth, and the Holy Book, the emblem of that truth, in the full light of the sun, with the brooding wings of God's spirit and the arm of his power supporting it in the heavens, form a device that the old Puritanism,* or rather the deep Christian religiousness of Whitney's mind delighted to contemplate. The book is open at the words, "ET VSQVE AD NUBES VERITAS TVA," Thy truth even to the clouds; a chain is suspended to it, reaching to the earth; and the great enemy of souls, to the manifest delight of demons looking on, is endeavouring to drag down the blessed volume. Such is the picture to which the fitting lines are devoted:

"THOVGHE Sathan striue, with all his maine, and mighte, Emblems, p. 166.
To hide the truthe, and dimme the lawe deuine:
Yet to his worde, the Lorde doth giue such lighte,
That to the East, and West, the same doth shine:
And those, that are so happie for to looke,
Saluation finde, within that blessed booke."

* The traces of Whitney's Puritanism are clear enough. His patron, from no high motive it is to be feared, countenanced that party, and is spoken of by our author as "a zelous fauourer of the Gospell, and of the godlie preachers thereof." Several expressions, though in the broad sense properly applied to all truly religious men, were at that day appropriated to one section only of Christ's church, and Whitney appears so to employ them. A single instance will suffice to show this:

"THE pastors good, that doe gladd tidinges preache, Emblems, p. 8.
The godlie sorte, with reuerence do imbrace:
Though they be men, yet since Godds worde they teache,
Wee honor them, and giue them higheste place."

Our last example of original verses by Whitney shall be, "In diuitem indoctum," On a rich man without learning; they certainly possess elegance as well as truth:

Emblems, p. 214.

"A LEADEN sworde, within a goulden sheathe,
Is like a foole of natures finest moulde:
To whome, shee did her rarest giftes bequethe,
Or like a sheepe, within a fleece of goulde.
Or like a clothe, whome colours braue adorn,
When as the grounde, is patched, rente, and torne.

For, if the minde the chiefest treasures lacke,
Thoughe nature bothe, and fortune, bee our frende;
Thoughe goulde wee weare, and purple on our backe,
Yet are wee poore, and none will vs comende
But onlie fooles; and flatterers, for theire gaine:
For other men, will ride vs with disdaine."

The character of Whitney as a poet may be summed up briefly by saying that there is much of simple beauty and purity both of sentiment and of expression in most of his poems, whether original or translated. He shared however in the great fault of his age,* an excessive deference to classical authorities and an immoderate use of the pagan mythology. Hence, as in all writers who err in this way, there is to the modern reader, whose mind has not been so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Greek and Roman literature, a frigidity and apparent want of

* For a lively picture of the extent of the fault read Motley's account of the solemnities attending the inauguration, or rather consecration, of the university of Leyden on the 5th of February 1575. The procession is very graphically described, and then, "As it reached the Nun's Bridge, a barge of triumph, gorgeously decorated, came floating down the sluggish Rhine. Upon its deck, under a canopy enwreathed with laurels and oranges, and adorned with tapestry, sat Apollo, attended by the Nine Muses, all in classical costume; at the helm stood Neptune with his trident. The Muses executed some beautiful concerted pieces; Apollo twanged his lute. Having reached the landing-place, this deputation from Parnassus stepped on shore, and stood awaiting the arrival of the procession. Each professor, as he advanced, was gravely embraced and kissed by Apollo and all the Nine Muses in turn, who greeted their arrival besides with a recitation of an elegant Latin poem. This classical ceremony terminated, the whole procession marched together to the cloister of Saint Barbara, the place proposed for the new university, where they listened to an eloquent oration by the Rev. Caspar Kolhas, after which they partook of a magnificent banquet. With this memorable feast, in the place where famine so lately reigned, the ceremonies were concluded."

reality in many of his verses; as there ever must be, when a writer is rather the exponent of a painfully acquired learning than of a naturally flowing sympathy.

Yet a rich vein of beautiful simplicity, far different from the over refinement, I dare to name it in many instances the degeneracy, of some of our modern poetry, pervades Whitney's stanzas. True, he introduces Isis and Niobe, Actæon and Diana, Apollo and Daphne, Achilles and Ajax, and a whole host of Greek and Latin worthies; but they are seldom brought forward inappropriately to the occasion or the sentiment; his mind had been trained into intimacy with them; their deeds were the familiars of his thoughts; and so it was really natural for a scholar, educated as he had been, and accustomed to hear all around him continually speaking of the "Roman models and the Attic muse,"—natural to give forth of his stores and to array himself or his sentiment, now with the shield of Achilles, and now with the toga of Cicero.

The wonder is that this custom or habit of expressing his thoughts did not spoil "his well of English undefiled," and make it, like the speech of Cerberus, "a leash of languages at once." That it did not do this, among many instances, I appeal to the lines on Silence:

"And Cato sayeth: That man is next to God, Emblems, p. 60
Whoe squares his speeche, in reasons rightful frame:
For idle wordes, God threatneth with his rodde,
And sayeth, wee must give reckoninge for the same:
Sainct Pavle likewise, this faulte doth sharplie tutche,
And oftentimes, condemneth bablinge muche."

And also to that stanza on the world which is above us, "Superest quod supra est:"

"This worlde must chaunge: That worlde, shall still indure. Emblems, p. 226.
Here, pleasures fade: There, shall they endlesse bee.
Here, man doth sinne: And there, hee shalbee pure.
Here, deathe he tastes: And there, shall neuer die.
Here, hathe hee griefe: and there shall ioyes possesse
As none hath seene, nor anie harte can guesse."

For pure, simple English, clothing very instructive thoughts, I would also name the fable of the Pine Tree and the Gourd to Emblems, p. 14. the motto "In momentaneam felicitatem," On momentary happiness. It has nearly every thing we can desire in a composition of the kind — clearness, a good conception well carried out, and an appropriate application of the imaginary tale:

"THE fruictfull gourde, was neighboure to the Pine,
And lowe at firste, abowte her roote did spread,
But yet, with dewes, and siluer droppes in fine,
It mounted vp, and almoste towch'de the head:
And with her fruicte, and leaues on euerie side,
Imbras'de the tree, and did the same deride.

To whome, the Pine with longe Experience wise,
And ofte had seene, suche peacockes loose theire plumes,
Thus aunswere made, thow owght'st not to despise,
My stocke at all, oh foole, thow much presumes.
In coulde, and heate, here longe hath bene my happe,
Yet am I sounde, and full of liuelie sappe.

But, when the froste, and coulde, shall thee assaie,
Thowghe nowe alofte, thow bragge, and freshlie bloome,
Yet, then thie roote, shall rotte, and fade awaie,
And shortlie, none shall knowe where was thy roome:
Thy fruicte, and leaues, that now so highe aspire
The passers by, shall treade within the mire.

Let them that stande, alofte on fortunes wheele,
And bragge, and boaste, with puffe of worldlie pride
Still beare in minde, howe soone the same maie reele,
And alwayes looke, for feare theire footinge slide:
And let not will, houlde vp theire heades for fame,
When inwarde wantes, maie not supporte the same."

The final characteristic and not the least is purity of thought and diction; not a single line in the whole book needs to be obliterated because of any impropriety of expression. And this merit is enhanced by the certainty that there is no affectation of prudery; the soul out of which Whitney spoke to his fellow men was one that feared God and loved truth, and clothed its thoughts in a poetic form only that it might with more fervour recommend the justice, the right-mindedness and the virtue which it prized and endeavoured to serve. All who know the grievous offensiveness of some of the writers of this age will esteem it no slight claim to praise that his mind, as Spenser describes Contemplation:

> "His mind was full of spiritual repast."

And his themes, though confined by the narrow limits which ever attend proverbs and devices and emblems, were those which chasten and improve the intellectual and moral powers:

> "Till oft converse with heavenly habitants
> Begin to cast a beam on th' outward shape,
> The unpolluted temple of the mind,
> And turns it by degrees to the soul's essence
> Till all be made immortal." Milton.

Most thankful am I that the enterprise which I dared to suggest has met with encouragement and is now near its desired end, and that Whitney's Emblems may again occupy a place of regard in his native county. Many have aided me by unlooked-for favour, good counsel and pleasant and most acceptable recognition; but in my own neighbourhood especially have I experienced sympathizing support, and cheering assistance,—all lending authority to the fine sentiment of our author:

> "Not for our selues, alone wee are create,
> But for our frendes, and for our countries good." Emblems, p. 64.

And good I am persuaded it is to listen to our worthies of old,—to glow with something of their inspiration,—to feel that life has an object, duties and motives, and that they live to the highest purposes who, besides seeking "under pleasaunte deuises" to commend "profitable moralles," carry on the chivalry of their age to progress and final triumph.

Good Reader! aid that work; and then will I say, as Whitney did, respecting the words and counsels of this old-world volume: "Being abashed that my habillitie can not affoorde them suche, as are fit to be offred vp to so honorable a suruaighe: yet if it shall like your honour to allowe of anie of them, I shall thinke my pen set to the booke in happie houre; and it shall incourage mee, to assay some matter of more momente, as soone as leasure will further my desire in that behalfe." See Epistle Dedicatorie, p. xiii.

The excellencies of my author — his quaint, simple wisdom, and the deep under-current of devout thoughtfulness which everywhere pervade his writings — may not have been set forth in their proper light; and the natural beauties which belong to the subject may be marred by the unskilfulness with which they are arranged; yet truly can I say that in love and admiration I have wrought this framework for pictures of a by-gone age; they are apples of gold, I would they were set amid ornaments of silver.

Whitney to the Reader.

So I commend, as far as it is proper to be done, both Whitney's labours and my own to the candid judgment of the friends and lovers of the old literature, trusting, as our Geffrey of "Cestreshir" himself did, that "my good will shalbe waighed as well as the worke, and that a pearle shall not bee looked for in a poore mans purce, I submit my doings herein to their censures."

INDEX TO THE MOTTOES,

WITH

TRANSLATIONS; AND SOME PROVERBIAL EXPRESSIONS.

HAD regard only to be paid to the assistance which the learned require, nothing more would be given, by way of Index, than the arrangement of the Mottoes in alphabetical order, with references to the pages. The book however may chance to interest general readers; and for their use, to facilitate the understanding of the subjects which the stanzas treat of, and in compliance with an expressed wish, translations are subjoined.

POSTSCRIPT TO THE INTRODUCTORY DISSERTATION.

(From Documents supplied by HENRY AUSTIN WHITNEY, Esq., Boston, Mass., U.S.A.)

FREEMASONRY in literature surely exists, in virtue of which brotherhood is recognised among its votaries; and between men of similar pursuits there is a spiritualism which in an inexplicable manner draws them together, though continents and oceans divide. By an all-directing Wisdom they have been subjected to the same influences at almost the same time, and they feel and confess the bond by which they are united. Under such a persuasion, therefore, I follow only the simple and natural promptings of the mind, when by this Postscript I communicate to my readers the very valuable and interesting documents entrusted to my use by a fellow-labourer, in the purpose, if not in the actual enterprise, of bringing "The Choice of Emblemes" again before the world.

I do this the more readily because these documents at once confirm my conjecture that I had probably fallen into errors which further researches would rectify, and because also they display more fully the ramifications of the Whitney families which I had confined almost entirely to the counties of Hereford and Chester. It appears that the branches spread from Bristol to York, and from Suffolk to Wales.

During the very time at which I was engaged on this fac-simile reprint, and even before, Mr. Samuel Austin Whitney of Glassboro', New Jersey, Horatio G. Somerby, esq., and Mr. Henry Austin Whitney were devoting themselves to the same object, and with the clearest right, if we do not term it, with direct obligation. Two of these gentlemen, I understand, are descendants from John Whitney of Islip, Oxfordshire, who in April 1635, with his wife Elinor and five sons, embarked from London for New England, and who in June of the same year "bought a sixteen-acre home-stall" at Watertown, where three other sons were born to him, making a goodly number for his quiver when he would "speak with the enemies in the gate." Some of the sons had a numerous offspring, — as John, with ten children, — Richard, with eight, — Thomas, with eleven, — Jonathan, with eleven, — Joshua, with eleven, — and Benjamin, with at least four. Thus the grandchildren of the emigrant John Whitney were not less than fifty-five. Whatever concerns the honour of the Whitney name may therefore justly be deemed the province and calling of their descendants.

And the more so, because of the common origin of the various families of Whitney; for Mr. H. A. Whitney testifies,—"From data in my possession, or at my command, the connection of families of the name in different parts of Herefordshire, in Radnor (Wales), Cheshire, Shropshire, Worcestershire, Yorkshire, and in Ireland, is readily traced to the parent stem,—the Whitneys of Whitney in Herefordshire." Again he says, "It is not unreasonable to suppose that all bearing the name had a common origin, and that they were descended from" Turstin the Fleming, "the son of the follower of William the Conqueror, who assumed the name of Whitney from his possessions" at Whitney in Herefordshire. A Fleming in 1086 founded the family, and after five hundred years his descendant Geffrey Whitney, in 1586, sought at Leyden the aid of a Fleming, Francis Rauelinghien, to imprint "The Choice of Emblemes." Three other centuries nearly have passed by, and the name which at first distinguished a border-chieftain is perpetuated to show how justice has greater triumphs than violence;

From the marginal references which I have added, it will be seen that to several persons remembered in the will devices were dedicated in "The Choice of Emblemes." Others who are named remain unknown; but the spelling antecedent to the seventeenth or even the eighteenth century was so unfixed that it is often nearly impossible to identify persons by their written names. Ioan Mills may have been of the family of Meoles, which had representatives at Sluys in Flanders, near the end of the seventeenth century, and "my Ladie Nedeham" was of a family of great influence in South Cheshire and North Shropshire, who had and have estates as earls of Kilmorey, close to the birthplace* and residence of our author; but Woodgate, Eldershae, and Evans are undetermined.

"Thy dartes do giue so great a wounde, they pierce the harte within;"

we are tempted to ask, was this Laura "Ioan Mills," to whom were bequeathed "twentie pounds," to be paid "within one quarter of a yeare," or was she "my Ladie Nedeham," who was honoured with "the best ringe"?

"Ryles Greene," or as the name is now often given, Royals Green, in the parish of Dodcot-cum-Wilkesley, is in the extreme south of Nantwich hundred, where Cheshire points to the centre of Shropshire; it is near to the high-road from Audlem to Whitchurch, and if Plantin had set one leg of his compasses upon it, with a radius of three miles the other leg would go round Coole Pilate, the probable place of the poet's birth, Audlem, "wheare," he says, "I my prime did spende," and "CVMBERMAIRE, that fame so farre commendes," and to which estate his own "farme or lease" belonged. A correspondent informs me "my Ladie Nedeham was only Lady by courtesy, and that her husband was Robert Nedeham esq.; she was the youngest daughter of Sir Edward Aston of Staffordshire."

* Note. — CONSTANCE WHITNEY. In Stowe's "Survey of London," folio, 1633, there is an inscription given, to be found on a monument in St. Giles Cripplegate Church, "on the South side of the quire," — the following account of which is taken from that work and the "New View of London," published in 1708.

"Above Mr. Fox's is a very spacious fine white Marble Monument, adorned with an entablature, Pediment; the figure of a young Lady rising (in a black coffin), with her winding-sheet about her (as an Emblem of the Resurrection); and two Cupids, one offering her a Crown, the other a Chaplet; with this Inscription, partly on the side of the Coffin, the rest under it [the Inscription is given as printed in the 'Survey of London,' 1633]: —

"'To the Memory
of CONSTANCE WHITNEY, eldest daughter to Sir ROBERT WHITNEY, of WHITNEY, the proper possession of him and his Ancestors, in Herefordshire, for above 540 yeares past. Her Mother was the fourth daughter of Sir THOMAS LUCY, of Charlcote, in Warwickshire, by CONSTANCE KIDDERMINSTER, daughter and Heire of RICHARD KIDDERMINSTER, Surveyor of the Court of Wards. This Lady Lucy, her grandmother, so loved her there she was eight years old,
[This two writes upon the same Inscription of a Coffin.]
At she excel'd in all noble qualities, becomming a Virgin of so sweet proportion of beauty and harmony of parts, she had all sweetness of manners answerable;
A delightfull sharpeesse of wit;
An offenceless modesty of Conversation;
A singular respect and piety to her Parents; but Religious even to example.
She departed this Life most Christianly, at seventeene; dying, the griefe of all; but to her Grandmother an unrecoverable losse, save in her expectation shee shall not stay long after her, and the comfort of knowing whose she is, and where in the Resurrection to meet her.'"

The following is from the "New View of London:" —

"Under which Inscription are her Arms as a single woman, —

"'Sable a Cross Chequy Or and Gules. borne in a Lozenge.'

"There is no date to the Monument: but I have some reason to believe it about 100 years old. This is probably it that has given occasion to so many fabulous Relations of a Woman here, who, after she was buried, was taken up alive, and had several Children afterward."

Note by H. G. S. – Some person has added, in ink, to the foregoing account, — "two children, there being two on the monument." (?) The monument was probably erected about 1632.

WHITNEY OF CHINNOR AND ISLIP, OXFORDSHIRE.

JOHN WHITNEY. In his will, dated Aug. 5, 1550, and proved at Aylesbury, Sept. 12 of the same year, he calls himself, "late of Stoke-Goldington in Buckinghamshire," and desires to be buried in the Church there, "yf it conveynently maye be soo." — [Parish Register of Stoke-Goldington begins in 1540.]

= Ellen: carefully provided for in her husband's will.

William Whitney, eldest son; supervisor of his father's will. (Quere? Named in the will of Joan Goodchild.)

Alice. Mary. Isabel.

All named in their grandfather's will.

Thomas Whitney, second son; named in his father's will.

William Whitney, ... named in his grandfather's will. (Quere? of Islip, in Oxfordshire.)

(Quere? bur. at Islip, May 27, 1655.)

Alice, named in her grandfather's will.

Anne Whitney, baptized at Islip, April 22, 1597.

JOHN WHITNEY, third son; executor of his father's will. Named in the will of his wife's mother. His own, dated at Henton, in the parish of Chinnor, co. of Oxford, Dec. 20, 1575, was proved at Oxford, Mar. 10, 1575-6. Mentions his cousin, Thomas Whitney. His father bequeathed to him his part of a farm, that he held in connection with his son-in-law, John Browne. (Quere: Was this farm in Chinnor?)

= Joan, daughter of ... and Johan Goodchild, of Chinnor. Named in her mother's will, dated Oct. 4, 1544; also in her husband's will.

Simon Whitney. His father placed him under the guardianship of his brother William.

Elizabeth Whitney, named in her father's will as the wife of John Browne. Their children, then, were Thomas and Robert.

John Whitney, of Henton, in Chinnor, co. of Oxford. Named in the wills of his grandfather Whitney (1550), and grandmother Goodchild (1544). Executor of his father's will. His own, dated April 19, 1602, was proved at Oxford, Oct. 17, 1608.

= Isabel, co-executrix of her husband's will. Her own, dated May 25, 1635, was proved April 6, 1639. Mentions son-in-law, William Coxe.

= Mary.

Leonard Whitney, baptized Oct. 2, 1616.

JOHN WHITNEY, "the younger," named in the will of his grandfather Stappe, and in that of his father to succeed to the land in Oakley, should his brother John die without male issue. He was probably born in the year 1589, shortly before the earliest date in the Parish Register of Islip, which is in 1590.

He is supposed to be the same John Whitney, who, in April, 1635, with his wife and five sons, embarked at London, in the "Elizabeth and Anne," Roger Cooper, Master, for New England; and arrived at Charlestown the following month; settled at Watertown, and died there, June 1, 1673, aged "about 84 years," according to the church-record.

= Eleanor came to New England with her husband; died at Watertown, May 11, 1655.

Thomas Whitney, baptized at Islip, Sept. 14, 1593; buried there, Jan. 10, 1592-3. Parish Register begins 1590. No baptisms of Whitney recorded 1590 to 1625.

Richard Whitney, baptized at Islip, Nov. 17, 1595; buried there, Oct. 26, 1597. (Who was Richard of Little Missenden, Oxfordshire; who had John bapt. there, Nov. 10, 1631?)

Anne Whitney, named in her father's will, and in the will of her grandfather Stappe. Married at Islip, Sept. 29, 1624, to Francis Franklin.

Alice Whitney, baptized at Islip, July 12, 1599. Named in the wife of her grandfather Stappe, and her father. Married at Islip, April 20, 1626, to Robert Readland.

John Whitney, Richard Whitney, Nathaniel Whitney, THOMAS WHITNEY, Jonathan Whitney, came to New England with their father.

Joshua Whitney, born in Watertown, July 15, 1635.

The Parish Register of Stoke-Goldington begins in 1540.
The Parish Register of Islip begins in 1590. No baptisms of Whitney occur between 1590 and 1625.
The Parish Register of Pitchcott begins with marriages and burials in 1680; and baptisms, 1717.
The Parish Register of Oakley begins 1654.
The Register of Little Missenden, Oxfordshire, begins 1559; where may be found the baptism of a John Whitney, son of Richard Whitney, Nov. 10, 1631. [illegible]

At Ryles Green there are three farms, of which the largest contains about 200 acres, and one of these would be the "farme or lease which," the testator declares, "I holde of Richard Cotton of Cambermere, esquier."

Thus in his latter days was the poet in the very midst of old friends. Tenderly, in a foreign land had he written the lines :

"And as the bees, that farre and near doe straye,
And yet come home, when honie they haue founde :
So, thoughe some men doe linger longe awaye,
Yet loue they best their natiue countries grounde.
And from the same, the more they absent bee,
With more desire, they wishe the same to see ;"

And again :

"Wherefore, when happe, some goulden honie bringes ?
I will retorne, and rest my wearie winges ;"

And now, amid the bright scenes of his youth, with kindred near, full of faith and resignation the soul passed to his God.

These pages, their editor observes, "are, in part, the result of a search made by Mr. SAMUEL AUSTIN WHITNEY of Glassboro', New Jersey, in 1856, and since continued by H. G. From this IIIrd document, just before our page lxxxv, we extract in photo-lithograph, the pedigree of Whitney of Chinnor and Islip, to which are to be referred, "as is supposed," many of the Whitneys that for above two centuries have been settled in North America. To complete it there should be subjoined the pedigree of the Whitneys of Watertown, in New England, but we have already given notices of them sufficient to elucidate the subject. p. lxxxi. and lxxxv.

Many are the extracts we would make from the notes* to the Pedigrees and from the subject-matter of the Wills, but time and space both forbid. Of CONSTANCE WHITNEY, one of a family of twelve grandchildren of sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote in Warwickshire, Shakespeare's Mr. Justice Shallow, we must, however, give the record, which is sufficient of itself, if need were, to redeem the Lucy family from all the satirical inuendoes of the great dramatist. In St. Giles Cripplegate Church, London, there was erected to her "a very spacious fine white marble monument," described in Stowe's "Survey of London," folio, 1633, and bearing this inscription : Document II. p. 1.

"'To the Memory
of CONSTANCE WHITNEY, eldest daughter to Sir ROBERT WHITNEY, of WHITNEY, the proper possession of him and his Ancestors, in Herefordshire, for above 500 yeeres past. Her Mother was the fourth daughter of Sir THOMAS LUCY, of CHARLECOITE, in Warwickshire, by CONSTANCE KINGSMELL, daughter and Heire of RICHARD KINGSMELL, Surveyor of the Court of Wards. This Lady LUCY, her grandmother, so bred her since she was eight years old,
As she excel'd in all noble qualities, becomming a Virgin of so sweet proportion of beauty and harmony of parts, she had all sweetnesse of manners answerable :
A delightfull sharpnesse of wit ;
An offencelesse modesty of Conversation ;
A singular respect and piety to her Parents : but Religious even to example.
She departed this Life most Christianly, at seventeene ; dying, the griefe of all ; but to her Grandmother an unrecoverable losse, save in her expectation shee shall not stay long after her, and the comfort of knowing whose she is, and where in the Resurrection to meet her.'"

* One is a curious use of the word "world," as if it meant a period of time, the duration of a life, as well as a collected body of people ; it is in the will of "Margret Whytnye," dated October 20th, 1568, "Item I do hereby confesse before God & the world that I have received of Edwarde Drax my servante a perfect acompte of all my rents and all other receipts which he have received from the beginninge of the world untill now." to have sent forth my volume until it was freighted with some memorials of John Whitney, the patriarch of Watertown in New England, and the immediate successor, if not companion, of those who sailed in the Mayflower, and were "the pilgrim fathers" of 1620. Of them almost prophetically did our Cheshire poet speak when he illustrated in verse the old saying "Constantia comes victoriæ," steadfastness is the companion of victory;

If the former ages who knewe not the liuinge GOD, *nor his holie worde, haue bin ſo carefull herein: Then ought wee, muche more, who knowe not onlie howe odious it is, to man: but howe hatefull it is, cheeflie in the ſighte of God. all posteritie. For leauinge your natiue countrie, where so manie godlie and vertuous are countenanced: So manie learned aduaunced, and so manie studious incoraged by your honour. What other countrie in Christendome, but knoweth that your lordship is a Noble, and moste faithfull counsellor to her excellent Matie, a zelous fauorer of the Gospell, and of the godlie Preachers thereof, a louinge patron of learninge, and a bountifull Mecœnas to all the professors of worthie artes, and sciences: whereof my selfe is a witnes, who haue often harde the same in other countries, to your euerlastinge memorie.

Learninge woulde be soone put to silence, without the aide and supporte of such noble Peeres as your Lordship: which was well considered by the Emperors, and Princes manie hundreth yeares since: whereof Artaxerxes the Kinge of Persia hath lefte behinde him this example, who wrat to a ruler of one of his dominions to this effecte. Kinge of Kinges great Artaxerxes to Hiscanus gouernor of Hellesponte greeting. The fame of Hippocrates a Phisition is come vnto mee, therfore see thou geue him as muche goulde as he desireth, and all other thinges he wanteth, and send him to me. The same Alexander so honored the poët Pindarus, that at the destruction of Thebes he gaue chardge that the familie and kinred of Pindarus shoulde bee spared. Hee loued so learninge that he vsed to laie the Iliades of Homer (which he learned of Aristotle)* with his dagger vnder his beddes head. Also hauing learned certaine priuate instructions of his said Scoolemaister, after hauing knowledge that Aristotle had published the same to others, hee was highly offended: and althoughe hee weare busied in the great warres against Darius, yet in the middest of those waighty affaires, hee wrat vnto Aristotle, blaminge him for participating to others, that which hee desired to haue proper to him selfe. Sayinge, Howe can I excell others, in any thinges I haue learned of thee: if thou make the same common to all, for I had rather goe before them in learning, then in power and aboundance. Gellius setteth downe the Epistle of the King to Aristotle, with the aunsweare thereunto, being worthie to bee imprinted in the mindes of the honorable, that they might bee for euer remembred. Scipio Africanus vsed the Poët Ennius as his companion in his greate affaires, and to shewe his griefe for the losse of such a one, caused the image of Ennius to bee laide with him in his owne tombe. Augustus countinanced Virgill, and so loued him: that after his death, hee carefullie preserued his workes from the fire to the which they weare adiudged. Mecœnas manie waies shewed his noble minde vnto Horace, and Plutarche was in highe estimation with the Emperor Traian. Yea famous citties and comon wealthes haue imbraced the learned, Smyrna and sixe other citties so loued Homer, that after his deathe, there grewe great controuersie amongst them, which of them should rightlie claime him to bee theirs. Athens honored a longe time Demosthenes: Rome reioyced for Tullie. And of later times Florence boasted of Petrarke, and Roterodam of Erasmus. with manye other citties that did the like to diuers famous men. And theise againe to requite their honorable regardes, made them famous throughe their worthie workes to all ages, that deathe to the which their bodies by nature weare subiect, coulde not extincte nor burie nor burie their memories: but that the ſame remaine ſo longe as the worlde ſhall indure. And to ſpeake of ſome of them, Ariſtotle, greatlie honored Phillip, and was no leſſe careſull for the education of Alexander. For when hee came to bee kinge, beſides the houlſome preceptes hee preſcribed vnto him of regiment, yet hauinge knowledge of his earneſt deſire, to vnderſtand the natures and qualities of all creatures, compyled almoſte fiftie bookes, intreatinge of the ſame: hauing by the commaundement of Alexander out of Greece and all Aſia, manie thowſandes of Hunters, Faulkeners, Fowlers, Fiſhers, Heardmen, and ſuche as kepte bees, birdes, or anie other liuinge thinge: to helpe and aide him, with theire knowledge and experiences, in ſearchinge the ſecrettes, natures and qualities of all creatures. Aul. Gell. lib. 13. cap. 7.

Ennius beinge mindfull of the noble inclination of Scipio, did highlie extoll his worthie actes, regiſtring them in his learned cronicles to all poſterities: Virgill to ſhewe him ſelfe thankefull to Auguſtus: ſpent manie yeares about his famous worke of Æneiads, to deriue the race of the Emperor from Æneas, and the noble Troians. Horace amongſt his rare & learned workes ſtuffed full of wiſo and graue preceptes, oftentimes enterlaceth the ſame with the birthe the bountie the learninge, and the noble qualities of Mecœnas, & hathe made him for euer famous, & renowmed. Plutarche beſides his priuate bookes he wratte to Traian, of counſell and gouernement: Hee framed that excellent worke of liues, and compariſons betwene the Romanes and the Grecians: giuing due commendation aſwell to the Romanes, as to his owne countrimen. By which wee maie gather, that learning grounded vppon vertue hath bin alwaiſe enemie to ingratitude, and cannot lie hid, but is euermore workinge, & bewrayeth it ſelfe as the ſmoke bewrayeth the fire, And if anie thinge happen worthie memorie: by the benefit of the learned it is imparted, by their trauailes to future time. vertue, vertue, and loue none, nor like anie, but such as are of their owne vglie stampe. For it is a rule that faileth not, that those that are moste honourable, are most vertuous: bicause honour alwaies followeth vertue, as the shaddowe doth the bodie: and it is as vnpossible that a bodie shoulde be without a shaddowe in the sonne, as the right honourable in this life shoulde be voyde of vertue. Thus it is manifest howe learninge hath bin embraced, and had in highe estimation, by great Princes and noble Peeres, and that worthelie: Bicause by the benefit thereof, The actes of mightie Monarches & great Princes, and the matters and thinges of former time worthie memorie, done by sage Gouernors, and valiant Captaines. The mutabillitie of worldly felicitie, and howe the wise haue behaued them selues in bothe fortunes: haue bin presented vnto them as in a glasse, for their instruction, from which they might drawe vnderstanding and good counsaile, to instruct and gouerne them selues in all their actions: and finde approoued examples for the whole course of their life, eyther to bee imitated, or eschewed. Of which singuler benefit, wee likewise are pertakers: For hereby, this present time behouldeth the accidentes of former times, as if they had bin done but yesterdaie. and wee maye behoulde the natures, & quallities, of our great grandfathers grandfathers, as if they yet liued before our eies. And as former time, and present time, haue reaped thereby, this inestimable fuell; So likewise, future time so long as the worlde shall indure, shall taste of this blessing: For our succession, shall see what we haue seene, and behoulde hereby what famous thinges weare enterprised and done in our daies, as if they weare euen nowe standing at our elbowes. Yet howe greatlie learning hath bin impeached since the firste florishe thereof, when in stead of such louing and bountifull princes and patrons, the worlde broughte

And Valentinianus his partner in that opinion, with the curſed crewe of their companions, As Caligula, Nero, Diocletian, with Machomet, Baiazet, and ſuch like monſters of nature, being cruell perſecutors, enemies of all humanitie, and diſtroyers of all diſcipline: who diſpiſing God and all goodnes, did degenerate ſo farre from their forfathers, that they delighted whollie to ſpill the blood of the worthie men, to burne the famous libraries, and to raſe and ouerthrowe the vniuerſities, and ſchooles, of all artes and ſciences: as in the tragicall Hiſtories of former times is recorded, and can not bee but with great griefe remembred. And althoughe learning hath bin greatlie decaied in theſe later times, Yet wee muſt (with thankes vnto God therefore) confeſſe, That it hath pleaſed him alwaies, to raiſe vp ſome louers and fauorers therof, who haue tendered and embraced the ſame, and for the preſeruinge it to their poſterities, haue lefte behinde ſinguler monuments of their care, & zelous mindes in this behalfe: As Charles the great, Kinge of Fraunce, who erected two vniuerſities, the one at Paris, the other at Pauia, placing therein many famous men: and Sigiſmundus Emperor, who highlie extolled the learned, and blamed the Princes of Germanie, for their ſmall regarde vnto them: And vnderſtanding by ſomme, that althoughe he cheriſhed the learned, yet it was ſaied they were but pore and baſe perſons, aunſwered: I loue them who excell others for vertue, and learninge, out of the which I meaſure nobilitie. Crinitus lib. 15. cap. 9. Volaterranus in Geog.

BVT remembring I write to your good Lordship. I will therefore abridge of purpose, that which might bee more larglie amplified, knowing there needeth no Apologie to bee made vnto your honour, in the behalfe of learning: whose noble minde hath bin so addicted to the same these many yeares, that diuers, who are nowe famous men, had bin throughe pouertie, longe since discouraged from their studies: if they had not founde your honour, so prone to bee their patron. But I confesse, I haue thus largelie written therof to this ende, That if anie other happe to looke hereuppon, in knowinge your zeale & honourable care of those that loue good letters: They might also knowe thereby, that you haue possession of that grounde from which true nobilitie florisheth: And likewise that you followe the good examples of manie Princes, and great personages, who are renowmed therefore, beyond anie other their desertes. And likewise, if anie be coulde, in countinancinge the learned, (as there are tootoo manie, whose frendship is (as I may saie) frozen, and starke towarde them.) This mighte a little thawe and mollifie them: and serue as a ſpurre to pricke them forwarde, to follow the ſteppes of your good Lordship. There be three thinges greatlie deſired in this life, that is healthe, wealthe, and fame. and ſome haue made queſtion which of theſe is the chiefe: the ſick, ſaieth health. the couetous, comendeth wealthe. and bothe theſe place good name laſte of all. But they be bothe partiall iudges; for he that is of ſincere and vprighte iudgement, is of contrarie opinion: Bicauſe that healthe, and wealthe, though they bee neuer ſo good, and ſo great, determine with the bodie, and are ſubiecte vnto time; But honour, fame, renowme, and good reporte, doe triumphe ouer deathe, and make men liue for euer: where otherwiſe the greateſt Princes, in ſhorte time are worne out of memorie, and cleane forgotten. For, what is man in this worlde? without fame to leaue behinde him, but like a bubble of water, that now riſeth, & anon is not knowne where it was. Which being wel cõſidered by your honour, you haue made choice of the beſt parte, and embraced throughe vertue, that which liueth, and neuer dieth. For vertue (as I ſaid) alwaies goeth before honour, & giueth a perpetuitie of felicitie in this worlde, and in the worlde to come. And althoughe throughe the iniquitie of time (as is declared) ſuch excellent learned men as haue bin, are not to bee exſpected in this oulde age of the worlde, Yet as zelous care, and dewtifull affection as euer was to their Lordes and Patrons, there is no doubte dothe generallie floriſhe and is apparante: whereof your honour hath had tryall, by the learned labours of manie famous men. Farre behinde whome, my ſelfe, (although of all the meaneſt) yet beinge pricked forwarde by your good Lordſhipps bountie, and incouraged by your great clemencie, moſte humblie preſente theiſe my gatheringes, and gleaninges out of other mens harueſtes, vnto your honour: a worke both pleaſaunte and pithie, which I haue garniſhed with manie hiſtories, with the proper applications and expoſitions of thoſe Emblemes that I founde obſcure: Offering it vp to your honour to looke vppon at ſome houres for your recreation. I hope it ſhalbee the more delightfull, bicauſe none to my knowledge, hathe aſſayed the ſame before: & for that diuers of the inuentiõs are of my owne ſlender workmanſhip. But chieflie, bicauſe vnder pleaſaunte deuiſes, are profitable moralles, and no ſhaddowes, voide of ſubſtance: nor anie conceyte, without ſome cauſe worthie conſideration: for the wounding of wickednes, and extolling of vertue. which maie ſerue, as a mirrour: to the lewde for their amendement. & to the godlie, for their better goinge forwarde in their courſe, that leades to euerlaſtinge glorie. Beinge abaſhed that my habillitie can not affoorde them ſuche, as are fit to be offred vp to ſo honorable a ſuruaighe: yet if it ſhall like your honour to allowe of anie of them, I ſhall thinke my pen ſet to the booke in happie houre; and it ſhall incourage mee, to aſſay ſome matter of more momente, as ſoone as leaſure will further my deſire in that behalfe.

THE almightie God from whome all honour and true nobillitie doe proceede, who hathe manie yeares, moſte louinglie and liberallie, indued your Lordſhip with the ſame, bleſſe and prolonge your daies here, that wee maie behoulde the conſummatiõ of happie ould age in your honour: before you ſhalbe ſummoned to the euerlaſting honour, which is alwaies permanent without mutabilitie, Amen. At London the XXVIII. of Nouember, Anno M. D. LXXXV.

Your Honours humble &
faithfull ſeruant

TO THE READER.

WHEN I had finiſhed this my collection of Emblemes (gentle Reader,) and preſented the ſame in writinge vnto my Lorde, preſentlie before his Honour paſſed the ſeas into the lowe countries: I was after, earneſtlie required by ſomme that perʋſed the ſame, to haue it imprinted: whoſe requeſte, when I had well conſidered, althoughe I did perceiue the charge was verie heauie for mee, (waighinge my owne weakenes) I meane my wante of learninge, and iudgement, to ſet forth any thinge vnto the viewe of this age, wherein ſo manie wiſe & learned doe floriſhe, and muſt haue the ſcanninge thereof. Yet knowinge their fauours to bee ſuch vnto mee, as in dewtie I mighte not denie them any thinge I can: I did rather chooſe to vndergoe any burthen, and almoſte fainte in forwardnes to ſatisfie them, then to ſhewe anie wante of good will, in denyinge their continuall deſires. wherefore, licence beinge obtained for the publiſhing thereof, I offer it heare (good Reader) to thy viewe, in the ſame ſorte as I preſented it before. Onelie this excepte: That I haue now in diuerſe places, quoted in the margent ſome ſentẽces in Latin, & ſuch verſes as I thoughte did beſte fit the ſeuerall matters I wratte of. And alſo haue written ſomme of the Emblemes, to certaine of my frendes, to whome either in dutie or frendſhip, I am diuers waies bounde: which both weare wantinge in my firſte edition, and nowe added herevnto, for theſe reaſons inſuinge. Firſte I noted the ſame in Latin, to helpe and further ſome of my acquaintaunce wheare this booke was imprinted, who hauinge no taſte in the Engliſhe tonge, yet weare earneſtly addicted to the vnderſtandinge hereof: and alſo, wheare I founde any verſe, or ſayinge agreable with the matter, I did gather the ſame of purpoſe for my owne memorie, not doubtinge but the ſame may bee alſo frutefull to others.

For my intitulinge them to ſome of my frendes, I hope it ſhall not bee miſliked, for that the offices of dewtie and frendſhip are alwaies to bee fauored: and herin as I followe my auctors in Engliſhinge their deuiſes, So I imitate them, in dedicatinge ſome, to ſuch perſons, as I thinke the Emblemes doe beſt fitte and pertaine vnto, which order, obſerued Reuſnerus, Iunius, Sambucus, and others: as by their workes are apparante, Confeſſinge my faulte to bee chiefly this, in preſentinge to famous and worthie men, meane matter, farre to ſimple for their deſeruinges: yet truſtinge my good will ſhalbe waighed as well as the worke, and that a pearle ſhall not bee looked for in a poore mans purſe, I ſubmit my doings herein to their cenſures.

Furthermore, wheare there are diuers Emblemes written of one matter, which may bee thoughte ſuperfluous. As againſt Pride, Enuie, Concupiſcence, Drunkennes, Couetouſnes, Vſurie, and ſuch like, againſt againſte euery one of them ſeuerally, ſondrie deuiſes: thereby the ſondry inuentions of the auctours may bee decerned, which I haue collected againſt thoſe vices eſpecially, bycauſe they are growē ſo mightie that one bloe will not beate them downe, but newe headdes ſpringe vp like Hydra, that Hercules weare not able to ſubdue them. But manie droppes pierce the ſtone, & with manie blowes the oke is ouerthrowen, So with manie reprehencions, wickednes is wounded, and ſinne aſhamed and giueth place vnto vertue. It reſteth now to ſhewe breeflie what this worde Embleme ſignifieth, and whereof it commeth, which thoughe it be borrowed of others, & not proper in the Engliſhe tonge, yet that which it ſignifieth: Is, and hathe bin alwaies in vſe amongſt vs, which worde being in Greeke ἐμβάλλειν, vel ἐπιβλῆδ is as muche to ſaye in Engliſhe as To ſet in, or to put in: properlie ment by ſuche figures, or workes, as are wroughte in plate, or in ſtones in the pauementes, or on the waules, or ſuche like, for the adorning of the place: hauinge ſome wittie deuiſe expreſſed with cunning woorkemanſhip, ſomethinge obſcure to be perceiued at the firſt, whereby, when with further conſideration it is vnderſtood, it maie the greater delighte the behoulder. And althoughe the worde dothe comprehende manie thinges, and diuers matters maie be therein contained; yet all Emblemes for the moſt parte, maie be reduced into theſe three kindes, which is Hiſtoricall, Naturall, & Morall. Hiſtoricall, as repreſenting the actes of ſome noble perſons, being matter of hiſtorie. Naturall, as in expreſſing the natures of creatures, for example, the loue of the yonge Storkes, to the oulde, or of ſuche like. Pietas Ciconia erga parentes. Morall, pertaining to vertue and inſtruction of life, which is the chiefe of the three, and the other two maye bee in ſome ſorte drawen into this head. For, all doe tende vnto diſcipline, and morall preceptes of liuing. I mighte write more at large hereof, and of the difference of Emblema Symbolum, & Ænigma, hauinge all (as it weare) ſome affinitie one with the other. But bicauſe my meaning is to write as briefely as I maie, for the auoiding of tediouſnes, I referre them that would further inquire therof, to And. Alciatus, Guiliel. Perrerius, Achilles Bocchius & to diuers others that haue written thereof, wel knowne to the learned. For I purpoſe at this preſent, to write onelie of this worde Embleme: Bicauſe it chiefflie doth pertaine vnto the matter I haue in hande, whereof I hope this muche, ſhall giue them ſome taſte that weare ignoraunt of the ſame.

Laſtlie if anie deuiſe herein ſhall delight thee, and if ſome other ſhall not pleaſe thee, yet in reſpect of that which doth like thee, paſſe ouer the ſame fauourably to others, with whome perhappes it maie be more agreable: For what one liketh, an other oftentimes doth not regarde: and what ſome dothe lothe, ſome other doth chiefflie eſteeme: whereof came the Prouerbe, So manie men, ſo manie mindes. But what? Shoulde I thinke that my ſimple trauaile herein ſhould ſcape ſcot-free from the tonges of the enuious, who are alwaies readie with a preiudicate opinion to condempne, before they vnderſtande the cauſe. No? thoughe the verſe weare (as I maye ſaye) written by the pen of Apollo him ſelfe? For in the former times, when the whole worlde was almoſte ouerſhadowed with the mantle of ignoraunce, If then, the learned and excellent worke of Homer, could not ſhielde him from the ſtinge of Zoilus. If Marcus Varro, was taunted by Remnius Palemon. If Cicero had ſixe bookes written againſte him, by Didymus Alexandrinus. And if Vergill weare enuied by Carbilius, who wrat a booke de Virgilianis erroribus, which he intituled Æneidomaſtix. and diuers others whoſe workes weare moſt ſinguler; if they coulde not eſcape the bites of ſuch Baſiliskes broode: Then howe maye I thinke, in this time which is ſo bleſſed, generallie with moſt rare and exquiſite perfection in all knowledge, and iudgement: that this ſlender aſſaye of my barren muſe, ſhould paſſe the pikes without puſſhing at: where thouſandes are ſo quicke ſighted, they will at the firſt, behoulde the leaſt iote, or tittle, that is not rightly placed. And althoughe, perhappes it maie bee embraced a while, for the newnes thereof, yet ſhortlie it ſhalbee caſt aſide as thinges that are vnſauerie & not eſteemed. For the nature of man is alwaies delighted in nouelties, & too much corrupte with curiouſnes and newfanglenes. The faireſt garden, wherein is greate varietie bothe of goodlie coulors, and ſweete ſmelles, can not like all mennes fancies: but ſome gallant coulours are miſſliked, and ſome pleaſant ſmelles not regarded. No cooke, can fitte all mennes taſtes, nor anie orator, pleaſe all mennes humors: but wheare the taſters are too daintie, his cookerie ſhalbe controlled: and wheare the auditors are to raſhe and careles in regarding, his Rethoricke ſhalbe condempned: and no worke ſo abſolute perfecte, but ſome are reſolute to reprehende. Yet truſtinge the learned, and thoſe that are of good iudgemente (whome I doe chiefelie deſire to bee the peruſers hereof) with indifferencie will reade, and then fauorablie yeelde their verdicte. I offer this my worke, ſuche as it is, vnto them; wherein I hope the greater ſorte ſhall finde ſomethinge to delighte them, and verie fewe of what age, or condition they bee, but may herin ſee ſome deuiſe, aunſwerable to their inclinations; truſting they wil ſo frendly accept thereof, That I ſhalbe rather incouraged thereby, to aſſay ſome further matter, as ſoone as I ſhall haue leaſure: then throughe their ſiniſter interpreting of my good will, to diſcorage mee from the ſame, and to wiſhe I had not yet communicated this, vnto all: which I might haue kepte priuate to a fewe. Yet hereby I haue ſatisfied my frendes requeſtes, and haue in ſome parte diſcharged my dutie vnto them: Therfore if they ſhalbee well pleaſed with my paines, I ſhall the leſſe care for anie others cauillinge. Thus wiſhing thee the fruition of thy good deſires, I leaue thee vnto the ſame. At Leyden in Hollande, the 1111. of Maye. M. D. LXXXVI.

Why should I then my fruiteles praise on WHITNEYS worke bestowe,
Where Wisdome, learninge, and deuise, so perfectly doe flowe.
Yet gentle Reader by thy leaue, thus muche I mente to wrighte,
As one that honours these his giftes, but seekes them not t'indighte.
No longe discourse, no tedious tale, I purpose am to tell:
Lest thou shouldst saye, Where is the nutte, you feede me with the shell.
Goe forwarde then in happie time, and thou shalt surely finde,
With coste, and labour well set out, a banquet for thy minde.

Her Maiesties poësie, at the great Lotterie in LONDON, begon M. D. LXVIII. and ended M. D. LXIX.

I See, and houlde my peace: a Princelie Poësie righte,
For euerie faulte, shoulde not prouoke, a Prince, or man of mighte.
For if that IOVE shoulde shoote, so ofte as men offende,

THE blynde, did beare the lame vppon his backe,
The burthen, did directe the bearors waies:
With mutuall helpe, they ſeru'd eche others lacke,
And euery one, their frendly league did praiſe:
The lame lente eies, the blynde did lend his feete,
And ſo they ſafe, did paſſe both feelde, and ſtreete.

Some lande aboundes, yet hathe the ſame her wante,
Some yeeldes her lacke, and wantes the others ſtore:
No man ſo ritche, but is in ſome thinge ſeante,
The greate eſtate, muſt not diſpiſe the pore:
Hee workes, and toyles, and makes his ſhowlders beare,
The ritche agayne, giues foode, and clothes, to weare.

So without poore, the ritche are like the lame:
And without ritche, the poore are like the blynde:
Let ritche lend eies, the poore his legges wil frame,
Thus ſhoulde yt bee. For ſo the Lorde aſſign'd,

IN PRAISE, OF THE TWO NOBLE EARLES, WARWICKE, AND LEYCESTER.

TWO Beares there are, the greater, and the leſſe,
Well knowne to thoſe that trauaile farre, and neare:
Without whoſe ſighte, the ſhipman ſailes by geſſe,
If that the Sonne, or Moone, doe not appeare.
They both doe ſhowe, to th' Equinoctiall line,
And one, vnto th' ANTIPODES doth ſhine.

Pes, vtſæ maioris ad Antipodes lucet.

Theſe, haue their lighte from PHOEBVS goulden raies,
And all the worlde, by them receyueth good:
Without whoſe helpe, no man mighte paſſe the ſeas,
But euer ſtande in daunger of the flood;
Oh bleſſed lighies, the worke of heauenly hande,
You, millions ſaue from ruthe of rocke, and ſande.

Two noble peeres, who both doe giue the beare,
Two famous Earles, whoſe praiſes pierce the ſkye:
Who both are plac'd in honours ſacred cheare,
Whoſe worthie fame ſhall liue, and neuer dye:
In Engliſhe courte doe ſpende their bleſſed daies:
Of publique weale, two greate, and mightie ſtaies.

And as thoſe ſtarres by PHOEBVS lighte are ſeene,
So, both theſe Earles haue honour, mighte, and power:
From PHOEBE brighte, our moſte renowmed Queene,
Whoſe fame, no time, nor enuie can deuower:
And vnder her, they ſhowe to others lighte,
And doe reioyce tenne thouſand with their ſighte.

But, ſince that all that haue bin borne, haue ende,
And nothinge can with natures lawes diſpence:
Vowchſafe oh Lorde, longe time their liues to lende,
Before thou call theſe noble perſons hence:
Whoſe fame, while that the Beares in ſkie ſhall ſhowe,
Within this lande, all future times ſhall knowe.

In praiſe

In praiſe of the Righte Honorable my good Lorde, and Maiſter, the Earle of LEYCESTER.

HEE that deſires to paſſe the ſurging Seas,
Bycauſe they are ſo wonderfull to ſee,
And without ſkill, doth venture wheare hee pleaſe,
While that the waues both caulme, and quiet bee,
Weare better farre, to keepe him on the lande,
Then for to take ſuch enterpriſe in hande.
For, if hee lacke his compaſſe, and his carde,
And arte therfore, to ſhape his courſe arighte:
Or pylottes good, that daungers may regarde,
When ſurge doth ſwell, and windes doe ſhowe their mighte,
Doth perrill life, throughe wanton wreckles will,
And doth to late lamente his lacke of ſkill.
So, hee that ſhoulde with will, bee ſtirr'd to wryte,
Your noble actes, your giftes and vertues rare:
If PALLAS ayde hee lacke, for to indite,
Hee ſhould but haſte his follie to declare.
And wronge your righte, deſeruinge VIRGILS penne;
And HOMERS ſkill, if they weare here agayne.
Then, beſt for ſuch to take a longer pauſe,
Then to attempte a-thinge ſo farre vnfitte:
For, they may knowe to write of ſuch a cauſe,
Beſeemeth beſt, the fine, and rareſt witte.
Yet thoſe that woulde, I wiſhe their learninge ſutche,
That as they ſhoulde, they mighte your vertues tutche.

An other of the ſame.

SINCE fame is wighte of winge, and throughe eche clymate flies;
And woorthy actes of noble peeres, doth raiſe vnto the ſkies.
And ſince ſhee hathe extoll'd your praiſes longe agoe,
That other countries farre, and neare, your noble name doe knowe.
Althoughe I houlde my peace, throughe wante of learned ſkill,
Yet ſhall your paſſinge fame bee knowne, and bee renowmed ſtill.
And thoſe that haue deſire, vppon your praiſe to looke,
May finde it truly pen'd by fame, within her goulden booke.
Where, on the formoſt fronte of honours hautie ſtage,
Shee placeth you, in equall roome, with anie of your age.
Wherfore to fame I yeeld, and ceaſe what I begonne:
Bicauſe, it is in vaine, to ſet a candell in the Sonne.

THE former parte, nowe paſte, of this my booke,
The ſeconde parte in order doth inſue:
Which, I beginne with IANVS double looke,
That as hee ſees, the yeares both oulde, and newe,
So, with regarde, I may theſe partes behoulde,
Peruſinge ofte, the newe, and eeke the oulde.

And if, that faulte within vs doe appeare,
Within the yeare, that is alreadie donne,
As IANVS biddes vs alter with the yeare,
And make amendes, within the yeare begonne,
Euen ſo, my ſelfe ſuruayghinge what is paſt;
With greater heede, may take in hande the laſte.

This Image had his rites, and temple faire,
And call'd the GOD of warre, and peace, bicauſe
In warres, hee warn'de of peace not to diſpaire:
And warn'de in peace, to practiſe martiall lawes:
And furthermore, his lookes did teache this ſomme;
To beare in minde, time paſt, and time to comme.

Quid per geminum Ianum ſignificetur. Plin. Natur. Hiſt. lib. 34. cap. 7.

SINCE

To the honorable Sir PHILIPPE SIDNEY Knight, Gouuernour of the Garriſon, and towne of Vliſsinge.

SINCE beſt deſerte, for valour of the minde,
And prowes great, the Romanes did deſerue;
And ſithe, the worlde might not their matches finde,
In former times, as aucthors yet reſerue:
A fewe of them I meane for to recite,
That valiaunt mindes maye haue therein delighte.

And but to tutche the naked names of ſome,
As Romulus, that firſt the wall did laye: Romulus.
And ſo, from thence to nearer times to come,
To Curtius boulde, that did the gulfe aſſaye: Marcus Curtius.
Or Cocles eeke, who did his foes withſtande, Horatius Cocles.
Till bridge was broke, and armed ſwamme to lande.

Then Poſthumus, I might with theſe repeate, Aulus Poſthumus
That did repulſe the Latines, from the waules.
And Manlius, a man of courage greate, Manlius Capitolinus.
Who did defende the Capitoll from Gaules: Fabij.
And Fabius name, of whome this dothe remaine, Martius Coriolanus.
Three hundreth ſixe, weare in one battaile ſlaine. C. Fabricius.

De cuius fide, ſic Pyrrhus apud Eutropium De bello Terentino. Ille eſt Fabricius qui difficilius ab honeſtate, quàm Sol a curſu ſuo auerti poſſet.

With theſe, by righte comes Coriolanus in,
Whoſe cruell minde did make his countrie ſmarte;
Till mothers teares, and wiues, did pittie winne:
Fabricius then, whome bribes coulde not peruerte.
And Decij eeke; and Iunij voide of dreede: Decy. Iunij.
With Curij; and Metelli, doe ſucceede. Curij. Metelli.

Dentatus nexte, that ſixe ſcore battailes foughte, Sicinius Dentatus
Who, Romanes call'de ACHILLES, for his force: Aul. Gell. lib. 2. cap. 11. & Plin. lib. 7. cap. 28.
Vnto his graue no wounde behinde hee broughte,
But fortie ſiue before, did carue his corſe.
Torquatus eeke, his foe that ouercame, Manlius Torquatus.
And tooke his chaine, whereby he had his name.

With Claudius blinde, and Claudius Caudex nam'de, Appius Claudius Cæcus
Two brothers boulde, for valour great renoum'de; Appius Claudius Caudex.

Attilius Calatinus. And Calatine, that all SICILIA tamde,
And one the Sea, Hamilcar did confounde:
Cornel. Nepos. Lucȓatius eeke, that Carthage fleete ſubdude,
Lucȓatius Catulus. Whereby, for peace they with ſubmiſſion ſude.

Fabius Maximus. And Fabius greate, and Marc Marcellus boulde,
Marcus Marcellus That at the lengthe did SYRACVSA ſacke:
Marcus Portius Cato. And eeke the actes of Portius wee behoulde, Whoſe life thoughe longe, yet Rome to ſoone did lacke:
Cn. Duillius. Duillius yet, and Liuius wee doe knowe, Liuius Salinator. Thoughe they weare turn'd to poulder longe agoe.

Claudius Nero. What ſhoulde I ſpeake of Claudius Neros harte, Eutrop. de ſecundo Bello Punico. When HANIBAL, did royall Rome diſmaye:
And HASDRVBAL did haſt to take his parte,
But Claudius, lo, did meete him by the waye,
And reaud his life, and put his hoſte to flighte,
And threwe his head to HANIBAL his ſighte.

Scipio Africanus. Then Scipio comes, that CARTHAGE waules did race.
Quintius Flamminius. A noble prince, the ſeconde vnto none:
Fuluius Nobilior. Flaminius then; and Fulutus haue their place
Paulus Æmilius. Æmilius actes, and Gracchus, yet are knowne:
Sempronius Gracchus. With Sylla fierce, and Caius Marius ſtoute, Cornelius Sylla. Whoſe ciuill warres, made Rome tenne yeares in doubte.
Caius Marius pater.

Appianus De Bello Ciuil. lib. 1. Sertorius, nexte, and eeke Gabinius name,
Quintus Sertorius With Craſſus, and Lucullus, highe renoumde:
Aulus Gabinius. And Cæſar great, that prince of endeleſſe fame, Licinius Graſſus. Whoſe actes, all landes, while worlde dothe laſte, ſhall ſounde.
Lucius Lucullus. Auguſtus eeke, that happie moſt did raigne, Iulius Cæſar. The ſcourge to them, that had his vnkle ſlaine.
Octauius Auguſtus.

M. Antonius. Anthonius then, that fortune longe did frende,
Yet at the lengthe, the moſt vnhappie man:
Lepidus. And Lepidus, forſaken in the ende,
M. Brutus. With Brutus boulde, and Caſſius, pale and wan:
Caſſius. With manie more, whome authors doe reporte.
Whereof, enſue ſome tutch'd in larger ſorte.

Mutius

Pietas in patriam.

THIS hande, and ſworde, within the furious flame;
Doth ſhewe his harte, that ſought PORSENNAS ende:
Whoſe countries good, and eeke perpetuall fame,
Before his life did SCÆVOLA commende:
No paine, had power his courage highe to quaile,
But bouldlie ſpake, when fire did him aſſaile.

Cornelius Nepos.

Which ſighte, abaſh'd the lookers on, but moſte
Amaz'de the kinge; who pardoned ſtraighte the knight:
And ceaſd the ſiege, and did remoove his hoſte,
When that hee ſawe one man ſo muche of mighte:
Oh noble minde, althoughe thy daies bee paſte;
Thy fame doth liue, and eeke, for aye ſhall laſte.

Furius Camillus.

CAMILLVS then, that did repulse the Gaules,
And vnto Rome her former state did giue:
When that her foes made spoile within her waules,
Lo here, amongst his actes that still shall liue.
I made my choice of this example rare,
That shall for aye his noble minde declare.
Wherefore, in briefe then this his woorthie parte.
What time he did besiege FALERIA stronge:
A scoolemaster, that bare a IVDAS harte,
Vnto the place where he was fostred longe,
Ofte walk'd abrode with schollers that hee toughte,
Whiche cloke hee vs'de, so that no harme was thoughte.
At lengthe, with sonnes of all the best, and moste,
Of noble peares, that kepte the towne by mighte:
Hee made his walke into the Romane hoste,
And, when hee came before CAMILLVS sighte,
Quoth hee, my Loude, lo these? thy prisoners bee,
Which beinge kepte, FALERIA yeeldes to thee.
Whereat, a while this noble captaine stay'd,
And pondering well the straungenes of the cause:
Vnto his frendes, this in effecte hee say'd.
Thoughe warres bee ill, yet good mens warres haue lawes,
And it behooues a Generall good to gaine
With valiaunt actes, and not with treacherous traine.

Verba Camilli apud Plutarchum, Xylandro interprete.
Grauis est inquit res bellum, vt quæ multis iniustis multisque violentis factis conficiatur. & tamen apud bonos viros, habent ut etiam belli quædam leges, neque tantopere victoria expetenda est, vt non fugienda sint officia quæ per scelus ac malitiam offeruntur, magnum enim imperatorem suæ virtutis, nō alienæ improbitatis fiducia conuenit bellum gerere.

Vita.

With that, hee cauſde this *SINON to bee ſtripte,
And whippes, and roddes, vnto the ſchollers gaue:
Whome, backe againe, into the toune they whipte,
Which facte, once knowne vnto their fathers graue:
With ioyfull hartes, they yeelded vp their Toune:
An acte moſte rare, and glaſſe of true renoume.

Inſperatum auxilium.

IF LIVIES pen haue written but the truthe,
And diuerſe mo, that actes of ould declare.
Then knowe, when Gaules did dare the Roman youthe, VALERIVS, lo, a Roman did prepare
By dinte of ſword, the challenger to trye,
Who both in armes incountred by and by.
And whilſt with force, they proou'd their weapons brighte,
And made the ſparkes to flie out of the ſteele,
A Rauen, ſtraight, vppon VALERIVS lighte,
And made his foe a newe incounter feele:
Whome hee ſo ſore did damage, and diſtreſſe,
That at the lengthe, the Roman had ſucceſſe.
For, when his foe his forces at him bente,
With winges all ſpread the rauen dim'd his ſighte:
At lengthe, his face hee ſcratch'd, and all to rente,
And peck'd his eies, hee coulde not ſee the lighte,
Which ſhewes, the Lorde in daunger doth preſerue,
And rauens raiſe our wordlie wantes to ſerue.

THE Conſull boulde ATTILIVS, here regarde,
That AFRICKE made to tremble at his name;
Who, for his faithe receyued this rewarde,
Two hundreth thouſande men, hee ouercame.
And three ſcore ſhippes, and eeke two hundreth townes,
Yet flattringe fate, in fine vppon him frownes.
For, after by XANTIPPVS ouerthrowne,
To CARTHAGE broughte, in dungeon deepe was caſte;
Yet, with deſire for to redeeme their owne,
Their meſſenger they made him, at the laſte:
And in exchaunge, hee vnto Rome was ſente,
For priſoners there, and on his worde he wente.
Who promiſ'd this, hee woulde retourne to bandes,
If that hee fail'd of that, they did require:
But when hee ſawe ſo manie in their handes,
Thoughe Romanes glad, did graunt him his deſire:
Yet coulde hee not theretoo, in harte agree,
Bycauſe for him, ſo manie ſhoulde bee free.
Thus, countries loue, was dearer then his life,
Who backe retourn'de, to keepe his promiſe true:
Where hee did taſte longe time of tormentes riſe,
But yet, his harte no tortures coulde ſubdue.
His mangled eies, the Sonne all daye aſſailes;
And in the ende, was thruſte in tonne with nailes.

Vntill at lengthe an iron hande hee proou'd:
And after that CREMONA ſiege remoou'd.

Ad eoſdem Iudices.

WHEN Fire, and Aire, and Earthe, and Water, all weare one:
Before that worke deuine was wroughte, which nowe wee looke vppon.

Ouid. in Metam: lib. 1.
...quid corpore in vno
Frigida pugnabant calidis; humentia; ſiccis:
Mollibus, cum duris; ſine pondere, habentia pondus.

There was no forme of thinges, but a confuſed maſſe:
A lumpe, which CHAOS men did call: wherin no order was,
The Coulde, and Heare, did ſtriue: the Heauie thinges, and Lighte.
The Harde, and Softe, the Wette, and Drye: for none had ſhape arighte.
But when they weare diſpoſ'd, eache one into his roome:
The Fire, had Heate: the Aire, had Lighte: the Earthe, with fruites did bloome.
The Sea, had his increaſe: which thinges, to paſſe thus broughte:
Behoulde, of this vnperfecte maſſe, the goodly worlde was wroughte.

Tibul. l. 3.
Non domus vlla fores habuit, non fixa in agris
Qui regerat certis finibus arua lapis:
Ipſa mella dabat quercus, vtrique ferebant
Obuia ſicceris vbera lactis aquis:
Non acies, non ira fuit, non bella, nec enſis,
Inrumpi ſaeuus duxerat arte faber, &c.

Then all thinges did abounde, that ſeru'd the vſe of man:
The Riuets greate, with wyne, and oyle, and milke, and honie, ranne.
The Trees did yeeld their fruite: thoughe planting then vnknowne.
And CERES ſtill was in her pompe, thoughe ſeede weare neuer ſowne.
The ſeaſon, Sommer was: the Groues weare alwayes greene,
And euery banke, did beare the badge, of fragrant FLORA Queene.

This

This was the goulden worlde, that Poëttes praiſed moſte,
No hate, was harbor'd then at home: nor hatch'd, in forren coſte.
But after, when the earthe, with people did increaſe:
Ambition, ſtraighte began to ſpringe: and pryde, did baniſhe peace.
For, as all tymes doe change: euen ſo, this age did paſſe.
Then did the ſiluer age inſue. and then, the age of braſſe.
The Iron age was laſte, a fearefull curſed tyme:
Then, armies came of miſchiefes in: and fil'd the worlde with tryme.
Then rigor, and reuenge, did ſpringe in euell hower:
And men of mighte, did manadge all, and poore oppreſt with power.
And hee, that mightie was, his worde, did ſtand for lawe:
And what the poore did ploughe, and ſowe: the ritch away did drawe.
None mighte their wiues inioye, their daughters, or their goodes,
No, not their liues: ſuch tyraunts broode, did ſeeke to ſpill their bloodes.
Then vertues weare defac'd, and dim'd with vices vile,
Then wronge, did maſke in cloke of righte: then bad, did good exile
Then falſhood, ſhadowed truthe: and hate, laugh'd loue to ſkorne:
Then pitie, and compaſſion died: and bloodſhed fowle was borne.
So that no vertues then, their proper ſhapes did beare:
Nor coulde from vices bee decern'd, ſo ſtraunge they mixed weare.
That nowe, into the worlde, an other CHAOS came:
But GOD, that of the former heape: the heauen and earthe did frame.
And all thinges plac'd therein, his glorye to declare:
Sente IVSTICE downe vnto the earthe: ſuch loue to man hee bare
Who, ſo ſuruay'd, the world, with ſuch an heauenly vewe:
That quickley vertues ſhee aduanc'd: and vices did ſubdue.
And, of that worlde did make, a paradice, of bliſſe:
By which wee doo inferre: That where this ſacred Goddes is.
That land doth floriſhe ſtill, and gladnes, their doth growe:
Bicauſe that all, to God, and Prince, by her their dewties knowe.
And where her preſence wantes, there ruine raignes, and wracke:
And kingdomes can not longe indure; that doe this ladie lacke.
Then happie England moſt, where IVSTICE is embrac'd:
And eeke ſo many famous men, within her chaire are plac'd.

The weather warme, the honie did abounde:
And CVPID iudg'd the bees of harmeleſſe kinde,
But whilſte he tri'de his naked corpes they wounde:
And then to late his raſhe attempte hee ru'de,
When after ſweete, ſo tarte a taſte inſu'de.

So ofte it happes, when wee our fancies feede,
And only ioye in outwarde gallant ſhowes.
The inwarde man, if that wee doe not heede,
Wee ofte, doe plucke a nettle for a roſe:
No baite ſo ſweete as beautie, to the eie,
Yet ofte, it hathe worſe poyſon then the bee.

To LAVRA.

WHILST CVPID had deſire to taſte the honie ſweete,
And thruſt his hand into the tree, a bee with him did meete.
The boye no harme did doubt, vntill he felt the ſtinge:
But after to his mother ranne, and ofte his handes did wringe.
And cry'd to her for helpe, and toulde what hap befell:
Howe that a little beaſt with pricke, did make his finger ſwell.
Then VENVS ſmiling ſay'd, if that a little bee?
Doe hurte ſo ſore: thinke howe thou hurt'ſt? that art a childe to ſee.
For where the bee can pierce no further then the ſkinne:
Thy dartes do giue ſo great a wounde, they pierce the harte within.

Cùm quo conuenit aliud ex Anacreonte.

AS VENVS ſonne within the roſes play'd,
A buſie bee that crept therein vnſeene,
The wanton wagge with poyſoned ſtinge aſſay'd:
Whereat, aloude he cri'de, throughe ſmarte, and teene.
And ſought about, his mother for to finde:
To whome, with griefe he vttered all his minde.
And ſay'd, behoulde, a little creature wilde,
Whome huſbandmen (I heare) doe call a bee,
Hath prick'd mee ſore alas: whereat ſhee ſmil'de,
And ſay'd: my childe, if this be griefe to thee,
Remember then, although thou little arte?

Which ſhewes ſelfe loue, from which there fewe can ſcape,
A plague too rife: bewitcheth manie a one.
The ritche, the pore, the learned, and the ſotte,
Offende therein: and yet they ſee it not.

This, makes vs iudge too well of our deſertes,
When others ſmile, our ignorance to ſee:
And whie? Bicauſe ſelfe loue doth wounde our hartes,
And makes vs thinke, our deedes alone to bee.
Whiche ſecret ſore, lies hidden from our eyes,
And yet the ſame, an other plainlie ſees.

What follie more, what dotage like to this?
And doe we ſo our owne deuiſe eſteeme?
Or can we ſee ſo ſoone an others miſſe?

For of ſelfe loue, reproche, and ſhame proceedes.

THE fruicte that ſooneſt ripes, doth ſooneſt fade awaie.
And that which ſlowlie hath his time, will not ſo ſoone decaie.
Our writing in the duſte, can not indure a blaſte:
But that, which is in marble wroughte, from age, to age, doth laſte.
Euen ſo it is of wittes, ſome quicke, to put in vre:
Some dull to learne, but oftentimes the ſlowe are ſounde, and ſure.
And thoughe the apte, and prompte: ſoone learne, and ſoone forget.
Yet ofte the dull doe beare in minde, what firſt therein was ſet.
Hereof the prouerbe comes: Soone ripe, ſoone rotten turnes:
And greeneſt wood, though kindlinge longe, yet whotteſt moſt it burnes.

WHY fleeſt thou throughe the worlde? in hope to alter kinde:

For, when that barren verſe made Muſes voide of mirthe:

Sir Philip Sidney Knighte.

Behoulde, LVSINA ſweetelie ſounge, of SIDNEYS ioyfull birthe.
Whome mightie IOVE did bleſſe, with graces from aboue:
On whome, did fortune frendlie ſmile, and nature moſt did loue.
And then, behoulde, the pen, was by MERCVRIVS ſente,
Wherewith, hee alſo gaue to him, the gifte for to inuente.
That, when hee firſt began, his vayne in verſe to ſhowe.
More ſweete then honie, was the ſtile, that from his penne did flowe.
Wherewith, in youthe hee vſ'd to banniſhe idle fittes;
That nowe, his workes of endleſſe fame, delighte the worthie wittes.

No haul-

No haulting verſe hee writes, but matcheth former times,
No *Cherillus, he can abide, nor Poëttes patched rimes.
What volumes hath hee writte, that reſt among his frendes,
Which needes no other praiſe at all, eche worke it ſelfe comendes.
So, that hee famous liues, at home, and farre, and neare;
For thoſe that liue in other landes, of SIDNEYS giftes doe heare.
And ſuche as Muſes ſerue, in darkenes meere doe dwell;
If that they haue not ſeene his workes, they doe ſo farre excell.
Wherefore, for to extoll his name in what I might,
This Embleme lo, I did preſent, vnto this woorthie Knight.
Who, did the ſame refuſe, as not his proper due:
And at the firſt, his ſentence was, it did belonge to you.
Wherefore, lo, fame with trompe, that mountes vnto the ſkye:
And, farre aboue the higheſt ſpire, from pole, to pole dothe flye,
Heere houereth at your will, with pen adorn'd with baies:
Which for you bothe, ſhee hath prepar'd, vnto your endleſſe praiſe.
The laurell leafe for you, for him, the goulden pen;
The honours that the Muſes giue, vnto the rareſt men.
Wherefore, proceede I praye, vnto your laſting fame;
For writinges laſt when wee bee gonne, and doe preſerue our name.
And whilſt wee tarrye heere, no treaſure can procure,
The palme that waites vpon the pen, which euer doth indure.
Two thouſand yeares, and more, HOMERVS wrat his booke;
And yet, the fame doth ſtill remayne, and keepes his former looke.
Wheare Ægypte ſpires bee gonne, and ROME doth ruine feele,
Yet, both begonne ſince he was borne, thus time doth turne the wheele.
Yea, thoughe ſome Monarche greate ſome worke ſhould take in hand,
Of marble, or of Adamant, that manie worldes ſhoulde ſtande,
Yet, ſhould one only man, with labour of the braine,
Bequeathe the world a monument, that longer ſhoulde remaine.
And when that marble waules, with force of time ſhould waſte;
It ſhould indure from age, to age, and yet no age ſhould taſte.
Oh happie you therfore, who ſpend your bleſſed daies
In ſeruing GOD, your Prince, your lande, vnto your endleſſe praiſe.
And daily doe proceede, with trauaile of the minde,
To make you famous heere, and eeke, to leaue a fame behinde.
Which is the cheefeſt thinge, the greateſt Prince can haue,
For, fame doth triumphe ouer deathe, when corpes are cloſ'd in graue.
Euen ſo, your worthie workes, when you in peace ſhall ſleepe,
Shall make reporte of your deſerres, and DIERS name ſhall keepe.
Whome, I doe reuerence ſtill, as one of PALLAS peares:
And praye the Lorde, with ioyfull dayes for to prolonge your yeares.

ESSAY I.

SUBJECTS AND SOURCES OF THE MOTTOES AND DEVICES.

SECTION I. — General View — Devices not traced to other Emblematists — and those simply suggested by them.

WHITNEY'S Choice of Emblems is most truly a representative book, — representative not of the entire emblem literature which preceded him, but of a very considerable portion. Either by way of reference, or by direct adoption, there is set before the reader a very full view, not to name it a complete one, of what had been ventured on and achieved by his fellow-labourers. Originality he does not claim, though for this he deserves more credit than is usually assigned to him; but what he does claim to have done, was done in a masterly way, which only a man of learning and of culture could have accomplished.

The word motto speaks for itself. By device is to be understood the pictorial illustration of the motto, excluding the stanzas; and by emblem, the whole combination of motto, device and stanzas into an artistic expression of thought. The motto gives the subject, the device pictures it, the stanzas clothe it in language more or less poetical, and Emblem furnishes a name for the results when the three are made one and the work is perfected.

"Choice of Emblemes" is the significant title which is prefixed to this book, and most accurately does that word "choice" describe the nature of what has been done. Whitney made a selection from the labours of earlier writers, and especially from those whose works had been imprinted "in the house of Christopher Plantyn." He had access to and made use of other books of emblems, and sometimes has accommodated their devices and explanatory stanzas to the collection which himself was forming; but these were the accessories to his plan, and not the principals by the express aid of which his purpose was carried out.

Whitney "to the Reader," pp. xiv. and xv.

"Book of Roxburghe Ballads, 1592."

Collier informs us that in the sixteenth century it was the custom among printers to buy up the old wood-blocks which had been cut for other books, and, even without much coincidence of subject, to introduce them into their own publications. Of this practice he gives several amusing instances, but a better cannot be supplied than from the Great Folio Bible of Elizabeth's reign, to the expenses of which several of the nobility, as the earls of Leicester and Essex, contributed. Some of the large and highly-ornamented capitals belong properly to stories and anecdotes of the heathen mythology, but are heedlesly employed as embellishments of the sacred writings.

The practice spoken of was very extensively adopted by emblem-printers and publishers, and without any blame to be attached. The highly graphic drawings in Locher's and Brant's "Stultifera Nauis," Fool-freighted Ship, were introduced as illustrations for "La grãt nef des folz du mõde," The Great Ship of the Fools of the World. Again, the borders round the devices of Perrière's "Théâtre des bons Engins," are the same as those in Corrozet's "Hecatomgraphie," The Hundred Engravings; and copies of the same engravings as appear in Freitag's "Mythologia Ethica," Ethical Mythology, are inserted in a work entitled "Esbatiment moral des Animaux."

Plantin of Antwerp possessed abundant stores of pictorial embellishments* for books of many kinds; and when woodcuts or engravings had served for a work in Latin or French, he very freely employed them for a similar work in Flemish, Dutch, or English, and perchance in Spanish and Italian. The language was changed, and in emblem-books the stanzas also, to suit differences of thought or of customs, but, with a more or less ornamented border, the same woodcuts or engravings did service over and over again. It was no more considered strange to distribute the blocks than to distribute the type, and when either was wanted it assumed its fitting place on the compositor's table. The proofs of this are very distinctly to be traced, especially in the editions of Paradin or of Alciat from the year 1562 to 1608.

* These stores, it is said, still remain in "L'Imprimerie Plantinienne" at Antwerp, and greatly is it to be desired that M. Edward Moretus should unveil the treasures of his inheritance and make them accessible to the literary world.

A writer of great authority maintains that Whitney's emblems were chiefly borrowed from Paradin's "Heroical Devices." The analysis we are about to submit will show the inaccuracy of this statement, and that Alciat was the great source to which our author applied. Another writer, without entirely rectifying it, points out Dibdin's error, and affirms that some were taken from Paradin, others from Sambucus, Junius and Alciatus, and some also from the sacred emblems of Beza.

Dibdin. Bibliog. Dec. vol. i. p. 275.

There are indeed a few coincidences between the emblems of Whitney and those of Beza, but not above two examples of direct and immediate borrowing. Of the emblematists of Whitney's era the greater part were either directly or indirectly laid under contribution by him: not many of them escaped, and that rather because of incongruity in their subjects than because the works were unknown.* One or two of these are simply referred to, as Achilles Bocchius; and others are alluded to among divers persons "wel knowne to the learned." Of his own skill and invention, as far as the subjects and devices are concerned, very little was produced; in fact his aim was, not to strike out new paths, but to follow up the old.

And perhaps we ought to name from the same library:

Similar emblems to those of Whitney are to be found in many writers previous to the year 1586, when "the Choice of Emblemes" appeared; and in all probability, when not copied from other sources, they were suggested by the works of Sebastian Brant, William Perrière, Giles Corrozet, Horapollo, Bartholemew Aneau, Peter Coustau, Paolo Giovio, Gabriel Symeoni, Arnold Freitag, Theodore Beza and Nicholas Reusner. To these authors we may trace like thoughts and expressions and like devices.

But in the vast majority of instances there is an absolute identity between the mottoes and pictorial illustrations in Whitney and those in earlier or contemporary writers; and this identity extends to the employment of the very same wood-blocks for striking off the impressions. At various times, between 1562 and 1585, from Plantin's offices in Antwerp and Leyden, various editions had been published of emblems by Claude Paradin, Gabriel Faerni,* John Sambucus, Hadrian Junius and Andrew Alciat; these are the veritable originals of a large proportion of Whitney's stanzas, and supply his work with most of the pictorial devices which adorn it.

See Annales de l'Imp. Plantin. 1555-1589.

The devices not hitherto traced to other emblematists are these:

Page.	Description of Device.
31	The house on fire and the envious man.
95	The envious and the covetous.
112	The schoolmaster of Faleria.
114	Regulus Attilius tortured.

b	Reconciliation at sunset.
218*a*	Pan and Apollo, Midas being judge.
224*a*	A crown for the persecuted.
b	Alms by sound of trumpet.
225	The pilgrim looking heavenward.
228	The axe wielded by the woodman.
229*a*	Adam hiding behind a tree.
230	The sun setting.

* Properly a book of Fables, like the editions of Æsop, printed by Plantin in 1565, 1567 and 1581.

We cannot however say with certainty that the whole of these 23 emblems are original; further researches may lessen the number, and two or three works, to which I have not obtained access, seem likely to supply some of the missing identifications; they are from Plantin's* press, and therefore Whitney probably had seen them. It is a point undetermined, though I should expect to find the emblems on pages 133, 145 and 161 derived from some book of fables.

Annales de l'Imprimerie Plantinienne, pp. 88, 47 and 187.

For the other emblems the sources of the mottoes and devices may be arranged in two divisions:

I. Devices suggested only by those of other Emblematists, or similar to theirs:

II. Devices struck off from the same wood-blocks, and therefore identical.

I. Devices suggested only, or similar to those of other Emblematists.

Under this heading the emblems, with their description printed in italic letter, are alone really to be attributed to their respective authors as the sources from which Whitney took them; in other instances, with the description printed in roman letter, similarity exists,—little or nothing more. When a device is borrowed the motto belonging to it is generally borrowed also.

1°. Locher's translation into Latin of Sebastian Brant's "Stultifera Nauis," Fool-freighted Ship, quarto; with CLVI folios: there are 115 spirited though rather rough woodcuts, besides the title-page and the last page, ending with "In laudatissima Germaniæ vrbe Basiliensi: nup opa & pmotione Johãnis Bergman de Olpe Anno salutis nr̃e M.CCCCXCVII. There were five editions of Horapollo previous to this — the first at Venice by Aldus in 1505, and the others in 1517, 1518, 1521 and 1548. For the manuscripts and editions of Horapollo, the best work to consult is that of Dr. Conrad Leemans of Leyden, whose own edition with a commentary may be named, on critical grounds, as the best of this author. The same year and from the same printer appeared a French translation "L'IMAGINATION POËTIQUE, traduction en vers françois des latins et grecz par l'auteur mesme d'iceux." Brunet, 1860, vol. i. p. 283.

Plate XXXIV. 6°. Peter Coustau's "PEGMA, Cum narrationibus philosophicis," "Repository, with philosophical narrations;" Lyons, Bonhomme, 1555. The ornamented title-page has, like the Picta Poesis, a Mercury with the Gorgon's head, and the motto "ΕΚ ΠΟΝΟΥ ΚΛΕΟΣ," From Labour, Glory. The dedication is, "PETRVS COSTALIVS ANTONIO COSTALIO FRATRI S.D." Small octavo, pages 16, 336 and 8, or 360. The emblems count 92, with elaborate borders to each, but not well executed.

Plate XXXV. The French translation has every page highly embellished. "LE PEGME de Pierre Covstav," &c.; "from Latin into French by LANTEAVME de Romieu Gentleman of Arles;" Lyons, Molin, 1560. On the ornamented title-page is a figure of Minerva standing erect within a medallion having the motto around, "LITERAE ET ARMA PARANT (QVORVM DEA PALLAS) HONOREM." The woodcuts of the French translation are very similar to those of the Latin original, but the borders are not the same. Small octavo, pages 420. The emblems are 94.

The devices of Gabriel Symeoni are 36 on pages 9-44; those of Vescovo Giovio are 90 on pages 45-134. The whole work is also named "TETRASTICHI MORALI," Moral Four-lined Stanzas. The clear woodcuts are the same as those which were used for the French translation of the "Ragionamento di M. Paolo Giovio sopra i Motti & designi d'armi & d'amore," &c., and which was printed at Lyons in 1561; the same blocks were used again for a reprint of the original Italian at Lyons in 1574. For an account of Giovio's works consult Brunet's "Manuel du Libraire," iii. col. 582-584.

Manuel du Libraire, 1864, vol. v. col. 392. Brunet names a work of Symeoni's: it is "Les Devises et Emblèmes héroïques et Morales, inventées par le seigneur Gabriel Symeon;" Lyons, Guil. Roville, 1559, quarto, in 50 pages, with very pretty woodcuts.

8°. Arnold Freitag's "MYTHOLOGIA ETHICA," &c., "Ethical Mythology, that is, A very pleasant garden of Moral Philosophy, delivered through fables attributed to brute animals: In which, the labyrinth of human life being made clear, the path of virtue is taught in very beautiful precepts as by the thread of Theseus. With most artistic imitations of very noble sculptures by Arnold Freitag, explained in Latin, and engraved on brass. Antwerp M.D.LXXIX." Small quarto, pages 251, plates 125. Dedication: "CLARISSIMIS OPTIMISQVE VIRIS ABRAHAMO ORTELIO HISPANIARVM REGIS GEOGRAPHO, ET ANDREÆ XIMENIO LVSITANO, ARNOLDVS FREITAGHIVS S.D." Plate XXXVIII.

The above work is doubtless the same as that of which the title is given by M. A. A De Backer and Ch. Ruelens, with the addition "Philippo Gallæo Christophorus Plantinus excudebat;" thus fixing who the printer was. The copy used by me has written in it, by Mr. J. Brooks Yates, "The engravings by Gerard de Jode and others. The Rev. Thomas Corser has a work entitled Esbatiment moral des Animaux, with engravings from the same plates, but the explanations are in French sonnets." By whom the beautiful engravings were wrought is not exactly ascertained, for the Plantinian Annals say: "Pas de nom de graveur: mais les planches sortent évidemment de l'atelier de Galle, ce qui est constaté d'ailleurs par la mention faite au titre. Elles pourraient bien être l'œuvre de Gérard de Jode." "Annales de l'Imprimerie Plantinienne," pp. 202, 203. Page 203.

9°. Theodore Beza's "ICONES id est VERÆ IMAGINES," &c., Images, i.e. True Portraits of Men illustrious for learning and piety, &c., to which have been added some pictures which are named EMBLEMS; Geneva, Laonius, M.D.LXXX., quarto, unpaged, the emblems are 44. The dedication is, "SERENISSIMO PER DEI GRATIAM SCOTIÆ REGI IACOBO EIVS NOMINIS SEXTO, THEODORVS BEZA GRATIAM AC PACEM A DOMINO." The work is remarkable as containing the earliest known portrait of our James I. There was a French translation by Simon Goulart printed at Geneva in 1581, quarto.

Bibl. Decam. vol. i. p. 274.

"These emblems," says Dibdin, "are of peculiar delicacy of execution, but being heavily printed on a thin and coarse-grained paper, they lose much of the merit of their execution. The borders are elaborate, and perhaps of rather too much importance for the subjects contained within them, — so as in some degree to impair the effect."

Plate XLII.

10°. Nicholas Reusner's "EMBLEMATA," &c., Emblems, &c., partly ethical and physical, but partly historical and hieroglyphical, &c., to which is added a book of sacred images or emblems by Jeremiah Reusner; Franckfort, John Feyerabend, 1581, small quarto, pages 371.

The engravings on wood were by Virgil Solis and Jost Ammon. The emblems are comprised in four books of a general nature, and one book of sacred images; also three books of family pedigrees without any pictorial illustrations. Nearly all have dedications, — some of them very curious: as Emb. IIX. p. 210, "To Jesus Christ, God-man," entitled "Christ the ladder to heaven;" Emb. XXVI. p. 236, "To Jesus Christ, Pontifex and King, best and greatest," with the words "The stars shew the way to the king;" and Emb. XXXVI. p. 248, "To Peter an apostle of Jesus Christ." In the family pedigrees are celebrated "John Sambucus the learned physician," p. 297; "Christopher Plantin, the renowned printer," p. 328; and "Sigismund Feyerabend, the well-known bookseller," p. 329.

There is at the end of the volume a remarkable ornament, occupying the whole page; it is a figure of Fame, with a trumpet in each hand, one of which the goddess is sounding. The device is surrounded by the motto, "SI CVPIS VT CELEBRI STET TVA FAMA LOCO: PERVIGILES HABEAS OCVLOS, ANIMVMQVE SAGACEM" — If thou desirest that thy fame should stand in a noble place, thou shouldst have the eyes watchful and the mind alert.

There is also a poetical work by Reusner to which Whitney frequently refers; it is "POLYANTHIA, sive Paradisus poeticus," in VII books; Bâle 1579, octavo. Consult also Brunet's "Manuel," vol. iv. col. 1255. Emblems, pp. 50, 51, 73, 87, 97, 144, 147, 177,

87	The pelican feeding her young	73	189	The snake warmed by the fire	81
126	The poet's badge, the swan	91

Thus the devices in Whitney, which are similar to those of other emblem writers of his own era, and which might be suggested by them, are 103, — to be thus distributed: to Brant, 7; Perrière, 13, Corrozet, 11; Horapollo, 9; Aneau, 12; Coustau, 8; Giovio and Symeoni, 13; Freitag, 13; Beza, 4; and Reusner, 13. Probably, however, he did not borrow from these sources above 23 emblems.

SECTION II. — DEVICES STRUCK OFF FROM THE SAME WOOD-BLOCKS, AND THEREFORE IDENTICAL.

HOW far Devices and Mottoes that are similar to his own were really suggestive to Whitney of the subjects which he has chosen for illustration may be very questionable, but there can be no doubt with respect to those which are identical. In these the devices coincide stroke for stroke, line for line and figure for figure — the sole difference being a border of another pattern, which we know was easily effected, because the centre constituted a block by itself, and the framework in which it was set might be changed as propriety or fancy dictated.

The authors between whom and Whitney the identity existed of which we are speaking all found editors among the learned men whom Plantin gathered around him, and were sent forth from Antwerp or from Leyden. We shall arrange them rather in the order of their relative importance to Whitney's purpose than to their time or their merit. The names of the ten authors in Section I. who have similar emblems will be printed in italic letter.

Plate XXI. 1°. Andrew Alciat: "OMNIA ANDREÆ ALCIATI V.C. EMBLEMATA," &c., "All the Emblems of Andrew Alciat, with Commentaries, in which, the origin of every emblem being laid open, the meaning of the author is explained, and all obscurities and doubts cleared up, by Claude Mignault of Dijon. The third edition by far more richly stored than the others. Antwerp, from the office of Christopher Plantin,* chief printer to the king, M.D.LXXXI." Octavo, pages 782, emblems 197, trees 16, total 213. Each emblem has an ornamented border, and to each there are copious notes. The references are to this edition, unless an earlier be mentioned, but the arrangement and paging of it are very defective.

Plate VI. "ANDREÆ ALCIATI EMBLEMATVM LIBELLVS;" Paris, Wechel M.D.XXXIIII., small octavo, pages 120, emblems 112. On the title-page and at the end is the printer's symbol, with the motto "VNICVM ARBUSTŪ NŌ ALIT DVOS ERYTHACOS," One tree does not support two Redbreasts. The woodcuts are very curious and repeated from the same blocks in the Paris editions of 1536, 1540, 1542 and 1544.

J. B. Yates. Note.

Plate XVI. "ANDREÆ ALCIATI EMBLEMATVM LIBELLVS," &c.; Aldus, Venice M.D.XLVI. "With the privilege of Pope Paul III. and of the Senate of Venice for ten years." Small octavo, folios 47, emblems 84. The Aldine symbol is on the title-page and at the end, and the volume was printed by the sons of Aldus.

Plate XVII. "DIVERSE IMPRESE," &c., Various Designs adapted to various Morals, with verses which declare their significations, together with many others in the Italian language not often translated, taken from the emblems of ALCIAT; Lyons, Roville, 1551, octavo, pages 191, emblems 180. Every page is richly ornamented with a border, and there are Italian stanzas to each emblem.

Annales, pp. 64, 152, 226, 258 and 266.

* The editions of Alciat which Plantin himself issued were in 1566, 1574, 1581, 1583 and 1584, all in Latin.

"EMBLEMATA D. A. ALCIATI," &c., "Emblems of A. Alciat, lately revised by the Author, and, what were desired, enriched with designs. Some new emblems by the Author remarkable for their designs are added." Lyons, Roville, 1551, octavo, pages 226, emblems 211. This Latin edition contains 31 more emblems than the Italian, but in each edition 180 of the emblems are from the same blocks, the borders being changed. Both editions are most profusely embellished. 2°. Claude Paradin's "LES DEVISES HÉROÏQVES," &c., "The Heroical Devices of M. Claude Paradin, Canon of Beaujeau, of Signor Gabriel Symeon and of other authors." Antwerp, Plantin, M.D.LXII., in 16mo, folioed but not paged; with many well-executed woodcuts, and with notices of persons and events of much interest. The copy to which our references are made contains the autograph of our author Geffrey Whitney.

The earliest edition of Paradin was printed at Lyons in 1557,* thus: "Devises héroïques. Lyons, Ian de Tournes et Guill. Gazeau, 1557, in 8°, de 261 pp. avec 180 grav. sur bois." The printers, Plantin and Latius, issued several editions in Latin and French; there was in fact "une foule d'éditions, sortant de presses différentes;" as the Latin one, Antverpiæ, ex officina Christophori Plantini, 1567." In 16mo, pages 316; the figures are on wood, or rather "clichées en metal," stereotyped. The translator into Latin was "Jean le Gouverneur, de Gédinnes." This Latin edition was repeated in 1583.

"Annales de l'Imprimerie Plantinienne," 1865, pp. 32, 75, 76, 256.

Plate LVI.

We give a fac-simile of the title-page from a very rare copy lent for the purpose by the Rev. Thomas Corser. It is this English translation which Francis Douce supposes Shakespeare to have used when composing the triumph scene in Pericles. The dedication is curious: "To the renowmed Capteine Chr. Carleill Esq., chief Commander of her Maiesties forces in the prouince of Vlster, Ireland, and Seneschall there of the counties of Clandeboy, the Rowte, the Glens, the Duffre, and Kylultaugh."

3°. John Sambucus: "EMBLEMATA," &c., "Emblems, with some coins of ancient work, by John Sambucus of Tornau in Hungary. Antwerp, from the office of Christopher Plantin, M.D.LXIV." Octavo, pages 240, emblems 166, and coins 23. The title is set in a framework representing the nine Muses, and the well-known compasses are wrought into the composition. There are fine borders to the engravings. Mr. J. Brooks Yates marked in his copy that the woodcuts were by Gérard de Jode. The monograms on some of the embellishments are an I inserted into a C, an A and a G; the first, it is said, denotes the work of Jean Croissant, the next that of Assuerus Van Londerzeel, and the third that of Hubert Goltzius. Sambucus dedicated his emblems to "Maximilian II. Emperor-Augustus, king of Bohemia, Dalmatia and Croatia, Archduke of Austria, Count of the Tyrol," &c. The symbolical device represents the emperor enthroned upon the temple of Janus, of which the gates are closed; at his feet is the wolf suckling Remus and Romulus; he is extending an olive branch to an eagle which presents him three crowns — one in each claw and one in its beak; on the left hand are three persons in attendance on the emperor: and the picture is followed by three pages of laudatory and descriptive verses. This work is certainly the most elegant of all the emblem-books of the age.

"Annales de l'Imp. Plant." pt. i. p. 48.

This volume is the most elegant that had hitherto issued from the presses of Plantin. Each page in the emblem part has a border, in the midst of which is a pleasing vignette, and the dedications are nearly all to persons eminent in politics or in literature. The engravings or woodcuts appear to be of Italian origin, and are of remarkable delicacy. The ornamented borders are the same as those used for Whitney's Emblems.

"Annales," pp. 60, 95, 279.

The edition of 1566 is less beautiful, and that of 1569 a repetition. The edition of 1585 is in 32mo.

"HADRIANI IUNII EMBLEMATA eivsdem ÆNIGMATVM LIBELLVS, Cum noua & Emblematum & Ænigmatum Appendice. Lvgdvni Batavorvm Ex Officina Plantiniana Apud Franciscum Raphelengium, cIↃ.IↃ.xcvi." In 16mo, pages 167. The emblems are 62 on as many pages, with a Latin stanza of four lines to each; there are notes to the emblems pp. 69-151; of enigmas there are 53. The emblems are from the same blocks as former editions.

"Annales de l'Imp. Plant." 76, 87 and 166.

"EMBLESMES de Adrian le Jeune, faicts François et sommairent expliqués, Anvers, Christophe Plantin, 1567," is the title of a French translation attributed to Jacques Grevin. This edition was repeated in 1568 with Grevin's name as translator, and again in 1575.

"Annales," pp 166 and 64.

"EMBLEMATA Adriani Junii Medici. Overgheset in nederlantsche talc, deur M. A. G. T'Antwerpen, ghedruct by Christoffel Plantyn, M.D.LXXV. Met privilegie." In 16mo, emblems pp. 5-62. There is an engraving on wood at the head of each emblem. The translator of Junius also translated Sambucus into Flemish: both versions were undertaken by the advice of the celebrated geographer Abraham Ortelius and at Plantin's expense.

Whitney has to be debited with 20 emblems derived from Junius.

5°. Gabriel Faerni: "FABULÆ C. ex antiquis auctoribus delectæ et a Gabriele Faerno carminibus explicatæ (a Silvio Antoniano editæ) Romæ Vin-Luchinus, 1564." Quarto. "Les planches faites sur de bons dessins qu'on a attribués au Titien, sont gravées à l'eauforte." Brunet's Manuel du Libraire, vol. ii. pt. ii. col. 1160.

Plantin's first edition of Faerni's Fables appeared in 1563 in 16mo; a second edition in 12mo in 1567, and a third, also in 12mo, in 1585, with 100 plates on wood. The copy of the edition of 1585, belonging to William Stirling esq., of Keir, has the following title: "Annales," pp. 47, 70 and 279.

"CENTVM FABVLÆ ex Antiqvis Avctoribvs Delectæ, et a Gabriele Faerno Cremonensi Carminibus explicatæ. ANTVERPIÆ Apud Christophorum Plantinum, M.D.LXXXV." In 16mo, pages 173, emblems 100. Several traces of portions of the borders round Whitney's plates occur, as on pp. 16, 25, 34 and 44; also some of the ornaments are the same, as on pp. 27 and 118. The impressions in Whitney, even when from the same blocks, are on the whole clearer than those in this edition of Faerni. Plate XXVII.

So Whitney has borrowed from Faerni 16 emblems.

Now, ascertaining the results of inquiry after the devices in Whitney, struck off from the same wood-blocks, and therefore identical with those of other emblem writers, we count up — for Alciat 86 instances, Paradin 32, Sambucus 48, Junius 20, and Faerni 16; in all, 202.

In Whitney's work there are 248 devices, and we have accounted for the whole; 23 were original, 23 suggested, and 202 are identical with those of the five emblematists last named. Thus in "The Choice of Emblemes" 225 have been "gathered out of sundrie writers," and 23 is the number of the "divers newly devised."

Title-page of Whitney.

It is certainly an amount leaving little to the credit of the inventive or imaginative power bestowed on the mottoes and devices of a book often regarded, from its completeness, as the earliest work in the English language expressly on emblems. But this was of no great consequence, for the entire volume would be a novelty in England, except to the few who were versed in its mysteries. Whitney's fame rests on having so well executed what he undertook to accomplish, — to present to his nation a full and correct view of a species of literature which in a few years had grown into high favour and been the instruction and amusement of the monk in his cloister and of the pontiff in his chair of supremacy, engaged the talent of some of the foremost men in law, medicine and theology, and entertained alike Fleming, Frenchman and Spaniard,* the Hungarian on the Danube, and the Dutch by Utrecht, Leyden and the Zuyder Zee.

* A translation of Alciat's Emblems into Spanish was published about the middle of the sixteenth century. "Los Emblemas de Alciato traducidas en rhimas Españolas añadidas di figuras de nuovas emblemas &c., En Lyon por Girlielmo Rovillio 1549"— Francisco Guzman's "Trivmphas Morales," at Medina 1587 — Horosco Couaruvias' "Emblemas Morales," at Segovia 1589 — and Hernando de Soto's "Emblemas Moralezadas," at Madrid 1599, — attest that Spanish gravity was not slow to yield to the new infatuation as to emblems.

ESSAY II.

OBSOLETE WORDS IN WHITNEY, WITH PARALLELS CHIEFLY FROM CHAUCER, SPENSER AND SHAKESPEARE.

N collecting from the Emblems of Whitney the words that are obsolete we do not confound them with words that are archaic, of old forms but still in use though modernised in orthography. However strange the spelling may appear, as caruoraunte for cormorant, condempne for condemn, ginnes for gins, inoughe for enough, randonne for random, shalbe for shall be, suruaighe for survey, varijnge for varying, wanne for won, whotte for hot, and ycarthe for earth, — still, if the words remain in use, they will not be admitted into the following list. Again, some words will be given which, though spelled in the same way with others now current, were made use of by Whitney with a meaning that has passed away.*

It is, we conceive, ever useful for the elucidation of our old words thus to bring together the phrases and expressions in which they agree, but which have passed out of the current language. The list might be extended without difficulty, if we included also words that are undergoing a change of meaning, or that may be regarded as old-fashioned, though still retained in use. We should however be pursuing too wide a field, if we ventured farther into this subject. They who enter upon it will not fail to perceive how pure was the English which Whitney wrote. He abounds indeed in Latin quotations in his marginal notes, and scarcely ever spares an opportunity of making classical allusions; but he never offends us by the intrusion of idioms or phrases foreign to our language. As his style is simple and unaffected, so his words are of native birth, — the English of the old time; they are rich in expressiveness, and they have strength in themselves.

ESSAY III.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES OF CHRISTOPHER PLANTIN AND OF FRANCIS RAPHELENG, AND OF THE EMBLEM WRITERS TO WHOM WHITNEY WAS INDEBTED.

TYPOGRAPHY in the sixteenth century boasts three celebrated names, in Venice, Paris and Antwerp. Aldo Manuzio printed his first work in 1490; Paolo Manuzio, his son, succeeded to the printing office in 1515, and continued it to 1574; and Aldo Manuzio for a time gave promise of excelling both his father and grandfather, but becoming negligent, he died in poverty at Rome in 1597. The earliest work printed by Henry Stephens of Paris was in 1502; his celebrated second son Robert, and more celebrated grandson Henry, extended the renown of the office until 1598; and other members of the family, as late as 1661, carried on the art with fame if not with profit.

Plate XLIV. It may not be that CHRISTOPHER PLANTIN excelled those who bore the names of Aldus and of Stephens, but he was no unworthy coadjutor; and to him at least emblem writers are especially indebted for bringing so completely into unison the arts of printing and engraving. From the time when he commenced his business at Antwerp in 1555, until his death in 1589, there issued from his press nearly thirty editions of the chief emblem-books of the day, all executed with care, some possessing great beauty of execution, and one or two equal if not superior to any similar work of that age. But for these editions, out of which chiefly Whitney made his choice, the English reader must have waited some years before seeing any adequate representation of the learning, wit and skill, which on the continent of Europe had been bestowed upon emblem-books. It is therefore not inappropriately that these biographical notices begin with the name of the princely printer of Antwerp.

Christopher Plantyn, or Plantin, was born in 1514, at Mount Louis in Tourain, of poor and humble parents. He was very young when he came to Paris. There he worked for some time as a bookbinder; but afterwards, having learned the elements of printing with Robert Mace, of Caen in Normandy, he visited the chief printing offices of France, and more especially those in Lyons, where several emblem-books were printed. He now returned to Paris with the intention of establishing himself in business in that city. The religious troubles which prevailed decided him to go to the Netherlands. Soon after, about 1546, he married Joanna de la Rivière and fixed his abode in Antwerp, and the first book which issued from his press was "La institutione di una fanciulla nata nobilmente. L'institution d'une fille de noble maison, traduite de langue Tuscane en François. En Anvers, de l'Imprimerie de Christofle Plantin, avec privilege. 1555."* Annales de l'Imp. Plant. Bruxelles, 1865, p. 5.

Here for forty-four years, except when he retired to Leyden in consequence of the war in the Netherlands, Plantin pursued his calling with an increasing reputation. The correctness and beauty of the works published by him spread abroad his fame, and in a little time he acquired a considerable fortune. Of that he made a very noble use; his house, like the house of the Aldi at Venice, or of the Stephens at Paris, became the asylum of the learned, of whom there were always several entertained at his table. Those who were in need received succour from him, and he sought to attach them to himself by offering them honourable maintenance. He had also constantly in his printing office, for correctors, men of rare merit, such as Cornelius Kilian, Theodore Pulman, Victor Goselin, Justus Lipsius and Francis Rapheleng; and to this day with pride are shown the desks and benches where these learned sat to aid in giving learning to mankind.

If we trust the testimony of Malinkrot, Plantin, after the example of Robert Stephens, exposed his proof-sheets at his gate, De Ortu Typograph.

* Plantin is named as a master-printer in the registry of Saint Luc in 1550; but he was probably then in the office of John Bellerus, or in partnership with him. pp. 128, 135 promising a reward to those who should discover in them any errata. Because of the account rendered to him of the talent and carefulness of Plantin, the king of Spain (Philip II.) named him his Archi-typographus or Prototypographus, i.e. Chief Printer, and charged him to bring out a new edition of the Polyglott Bible of Alcala, that of Cardinal Ximenes, the Complutensian, commenced in 1502 and finished in 1517, and of which the copies began to be rare. This edition, in Hebrew, Chaldaic, Greek and Latin, is justly regarded as Plantin's master-work; it was issued, the first volume in 1569 and the last in 1573, in 8 volumes folio, and, except some little carelessness in the paging, is a very splendid example of typographic art and labour.* The famous Guillaume Lebé was induced to come from Paris to cast the letters and characters intended for the impression, and Philip II. sent from Spain the learned Arias Montanus to direct the important enterprise. While however adding greatly to Plantin's reputation, this magnificent work was almost the cause of his ruin, for the Spanish ministers with excessive rigour demanded the repayment of the sums which, during the prosecution of the work, had been lent him from the royal treasury.

Annales de l'Imp. Plant. pp. 1-324.

The catalogue of Plantin's publications, compiled by MM. A. De Backer et Ch. Ruelens, gives the titles of nearly 1030 works which had their origin from his types and presses, and as some are known to be omitted, though unintentionally, future inquiries may increase their number.

The French historian, De Thou, on a journey to Flanders and Holland in 1576, visited the workshops of Plantin, and saw twenty-seven presses in action, although, as he remarks, this famous printer was embarrassed in his affairs; but carrying out his well known motto, "Labore et Constantia," By work and steadiness, he re-established his fortunes.†

Plantin died the 1st of July 1589, having bequeathed his library to his grandson, Balthasar Moretus, and was buried in the cathedral of Antwerp, where his gravestone is still pointed out.

* For an account of the eight volumes, "Annales de l'Imprimerie Plantinienne" may be consulted, published at Brussels 1865.

† To this day (1865) his descendants are among the wealthy families of Belgium, and the library and printing office are now the property of M. Edward Moretus.

Besides the printing office at Antwerp he possessed two others, one at Leyden, a second at Paris. These were assigned as portions to his three daughters, Margaret, Martine and Jane: the eldest, married to Rapheleng, had the Leyden printing office; that of Paris fell to the youngest, who had married Gilles Begs; and the Antwerp business devolved on the second daughter, married to John Moereturf or Moretus. Moretus carried on the office in partnership with his mother-in-law. She was placed in a large house, which Guicciardini, who died in Antwerp in 1589, regarded as one of the principal ornaments of the city, and which after nearly three centuries is still owned by a Moretus, and still possesses the very treasures of the olden time, besides a vine in full bearing which Plantin himself planted. There are stored his types and presses and all the appliances of his noble art, which in modern days queenly hands have not disdained to work.

See his Description of the Netherlands.

Conrad Zeltner says this printer had types of silver and implements of ivory, but the same thing had already been reported of Robert Stephens, and with as little foundation. We may however name with absolute certainty Plantin's typographic ensign, — it may not have braved a thousand years the battle and the breeze, — but it indicates, as long as man shall be upon the earth, what the elements of his success are. The ensign is a hand holding an open compass and striking a circle; and around the device we read the significant words "LABORE ET CONSTANTIA." A better could not have been chosen, and Rapheleng and Moereturf religiously preserved it, and it still stands over the old mansion in Antwerp.

"In the house of Christopher Plantyn by Francis Raphelengius" were Whitney's Emblems "imprinted;" and we take for our second biographical notice, FRANCIS RAPHELENGIUS, or RAULENGHIEN, whose portrait is preserved in the university of Leyden.

He was born at Lanoy near Lille, the capital of the present department of the North, formerly French Flanders, February 27th 1539, and died July 20th 1597. He was from his boyhood intended for one of the learned professions, and was sent to school to Ghent, but his father's death compelled the interruption of his studies, and commerce seemed his destination. Business led him to Nuremberg, where he devoted his leisure hours to the ancient languages, and such rapid progress did he make that his mother no longer opposed his inclination, and literature became his pursuit. He went to Paris to perfect himself in Greek and Hebrew, but the civil wars, which desolated France about 1560-63, caused him to leave that country, and he passed over to England. Here, for some time, he taught Greek in the university of Cambridge, but his stay could not have been long; for on his return to the Netherlands he engaged as corrector of the press for Plantin, who was so charmed by his gentleness and ability as to offer him in marriage his eldest daughter Margaret, a most estimable woman; and the marriage took place in 1565.

Rapheleng rendered great services to his father-in-law, especially in the printing of the famous Polyglot Bible, issued between the years 1569 and 1573. Of this splendid work he corrected the proofs with great care; and besides, added to the sixth volume a Hebrew Grammar and an Epitome of Pagnini's Thesaurus of the Hebrew language; and in the seventh volume he assisted Montanus and the brothers Guido and Nicholas Fabricii in the Latin interpretation of the Hebrew Books, and gave the various readings and annotations by which the Chaldee paraphrase of the Book of Daniel was illustrated and amended.

Annales de l'Imp. Plant. Bruxelles, 1865, pp. 129, 130, 133.

During the civil wars of the Netherlands, or rather during part of them, Plantin retired to Leyden with his family. Rapheleng remained in Antwerp, charged with the direction of the printing office. During the famous seige, from July 1584 to August 17th 1585, Rapheleng was present, and shared its dangers. He then betook himself to Leyden to superintend and finally to own the printing office which his father-in-law had established there. He now learned Arabic and rendered himself a very able scholar in that language. John Dousa the elder, curator or rector of the university of Leyden, charged him in 1586 with the teaching of Hebrew, and in this employ he acquitted himself for some years with much distinction. Grief for the premature death of his wife, and a paralysis with which he was seized, rendered life almost insupportable, and his career ended in 1597, with as fair a name as any in the republic of letters.*

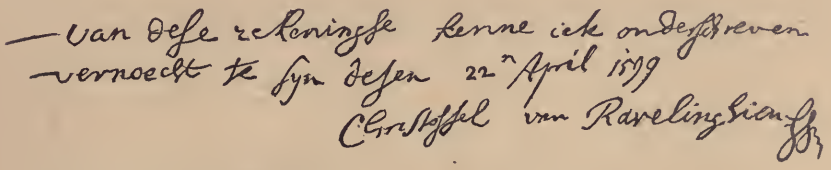
See Biographie Universelle, vol. xxxvii. p. 89, Dibdin's Bib. Decam. vol. ii. p. 158, and Cooper's Athenæ Cantabrigienses, vol. ii. p. 126, where is a list of his works.

A worthy descendant from Rapheleng's only grand-child, Maryhe Christoffella, is now resident in Leyden, namely, M. John T. Bodel Nyenhuis, who from 1829 to 1850 was printer to the university of Leyden, and who among his ancestors reckons four others that held the same office. On the 27th of July 1865 I was enjoying his hospitality, and he then wrote out for me the genealogy of himself and his family traced back to Christopher Plantin, and also gave me an autograph of which the following is a copy:



This Christopher Rapheleng was the second son of Francis, and appointed typographer to the university of Leyden in 1589; he was living in 1645. The other sons were Francis the eldest, eminent for early genius, who died in 1643, and Justus, named after Justus Lipsius; there was also a daughter Cornelia: but these do not appear to have left any descendants. M. John T. Bodel Nyenhuis is the author of a learned work, "Dissertatio Historico-Juridica, De Juribus Typographorum et Bibliopolarum in Regno Belgico. 8vo, pages 447, Leyden, M.D.CCCXIX." At the end of his book he quotes the famous words of Rénouard appended to his catalogue in 1819 of the library of an amateur: "Otez-lui ses liens, et laissez-le aller; c'est pour le commerce la plus facile et la plus efficace de toutes les protections."

According to the Genealogy by M. Bod Nyenhuis.

The portraits we are giving are from various sources: that of Plantin is from Dibdin; those of Brant, Giovio, Alciat, Junius and Sambucus are from De Bry ; Beza's is somewhat uncertain ; and Reusner's is from the edition of his own emblems.

Of THEODORE DE BRY we may remark that he was a celebrated portrait or miniature painter of the sixteenth century, who projected a work to contain the portraits of those illustrious for learning and erudition, with their lives written by J. J. Boissard. Of this work he lived to publish only Part I. in 1597 at Frankfort ; but his heirs carried on his enterprise, and between 1598 and 1631 brought out three other parts, making four in all. The work is in quarto, and contains 198 portraits. A fifth part was added in 1632 by William Fitzer, but it comprises only 32 pages, with 20 portraits chiefly of English bishops and learned men.

Plate XLV.

Plate XLVI.

In his Preface, De Bry affirms that the portraits were taken from the life, but this has been questioned and probably is not true in the full extent. The portraits are accompanied by biographical notices by John James Boissard, a highly esteemed antiquary, who was born at Besançon in 1528 and died at Metz in 1602. These notices are absent from some other editions, and render the first, which has besides the earliest proofs of the portraits, far superior to those which follow.

Clement's Bibl. Curieuse, vol. v. pp. 18 &c.

The work of Boissard and of De Bry and his heirs is the primary source from which the portraits and biographical notices of the emblem writers are derived, but not the only source, as the following pages will show.

Cebes, the disciple of Socrates, B.C. 390, Horapollo, about A.D. 410, and Hugo de Foliato, prior of St. Lawrence near Amiens, in the thirteenth century, are among the earliest writers of emblematical works ; but Whitney makes no allusion to them, though he appears to have been acquainted with the Hieroglyphica. We shall therefore begin our notices with HORAPOLLO, who, according to the best authorities, was a distinguished Greek grammarian of Phenebethis in Egypt, flourishing in the reign of Theodosius, A.D. 408-50, and teaching first in Alexandria and then in Constantinople. The age at which he flourished does not appear to have been ascertained; and of his translator from the Egyptian tongue into Greek nothing is known beyond the name, Philippus. From the barbarous words introduced, and other marks of a corrupted Greek, the translation is of a comparatively late age, and some bring it down even to the fifteenth century. However this may be, the work enjoyed very considerable popularity in Whitney's time, and between the first Aldine edition in 1505 and that at Rome in 1599 there were at least eight editions. A separate French version was issued in 1543, a Latin in 1544, an Italian in 1548, and a German in 1554.* Leemans' Prolegomena, pp. xxv-xxxvi.

Several of Whitney's emblems may be traced up to the Hieroglyphica,† not that they were adopted unchanged or immediately, but their sources were here, and they have been accommodated to suit modified thoughts and circumstances.

Champollion passes a disparaging judgment on Horapollo. He avers: "The study of this author has given birth only to vain theories, and the examination of the Egyptian inscriptions, book in hand, has produced only very feeble results. Would not that prove that the greater part of the symbols described and explained by Horapollo did not exclusively make part of what we call hieroglyphic writing, and belonged primitively to some other system of representing thought?" He then shows that the system is anaglyphic rather than hieroglyphic, — not sacred characters or sculptures, but allegorical representations, which abound on the Egyptian buildings. He afterwards admits, however, that he found on monuments information of many of the hieroglyphics of Horapollo, — indeed of a great part of those which are figured in Leemans' edition. Hieroglyph. Egypt. p. 347. Leemans' Prolegomena, pp. xii and xv.

An emblem writer is seldom very critical in judging the sources of his devices, or their exact meaning; it is sufficient for his purpose if they are currently received and understood; he adopts them because they are known, and not because they are authoritative or authenticated expressions of human thought.

De Bry. Plate XLVII.

BRANT, Sebastian, or Brandt, surnamed Titio, was born at Strasburg in 1458, and died at Bâle in 1520. The lines on his portrait say of him, that "he was equally skilled in law and in sacred poetry, noble in genius, but rude in art." His early studies were pursued in Bâle, where he enjoyed the titles of doctor and professor. His ability in business soon obtained for him a high reputation and the favour of many princes, especially of the emperor Maximilian I., who often consulted him and bestowed on him the title of imperial counsellor. Afterwards he was syndic and chancellor in his native land. He devoted his leisure to classic literature and poetic composition of various kinds. An edition of Virgil, ornamented with engravings, was published by him, and a translation into German verse of the Disticha, or Catechism concerning Morals, by Dionysius Cato. Indeed it has been said of Brant that he composed verses to infinity. The chief of his poems was in German iambics, a satirical work, entitled The Ship of Fools, which acquired great popularity, and was translated into Latin, French, Dutch and English. Of the Latin and of the French translation we present the title-pages and one of the emblems,—from which probably Whitney took the motto, "No man can serve two masters," though he has not treated it in the same way. Some idea may be gained of Brant's work from his lines

Biographie Universelle, Paris 1812, vol. v. p. 498.

Plates IV. and XXVIII.

See Plate V.

"Concerning obedience to two Masters.

"Two hares at one time may the swift hunter take Whose single dog hunts the wild woods through;
But who aims to two masters his service to make,
And oft strives to please each, — 'tis far harder to do.

Most foolish is he who would serve thundering Jove
And equally seek this bright world for his own;
Most rare 'tis accomplished, — two masters to love
With heart-service to each acceptable shown."

Between these stanzas the device is introduced, and at the side quotations chiefly from the Holy Scriptures, thus:

To serve two.

"No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Matt. vi. 24. Luke xvi. 9.

"He who makes haste to each finisheth neither well. A thought for many things is less intent on each single one. The heart going two ways will have no successes."

In exemplification of Brant's work and of Whitney's adoption of similar thoughts we may refer to the French translation, La grãt nef des folz du mõde, where four women are playing at dice. Whitney (p. 176) names only "three carelesse dames;" but in Brant we have the origin of the tale; and there may be seen in what spirit and in what way the Stultifera Navis has been furnished with its cargo. Plates XXVIII. and XXIX.

Brant's object plainly was to turn into ridicule and also to reprove the vices, eccentricities and follies of the time; and we may accept this judgment passed upon his work: "It is a collection of pleasantries, sometimes whimsical, sometimes gross, which might be piquant in their day, but which at present have no other merit than that of having enjoyed much success three hundred years ago." Biographie Universelle, Paris 1812, vol. x. p. 498.

For the editions of Brant consult Brunet's "Manuel du Libraire." Paris, 1860. Vol. i. col. 1202-9.

GIOVIO, Paolo, bishop of Nocera, in order of time next takes precedence. He was born at Como in Italy April 19th 1483, and died at Florence December 11th 1552, his epitaph says aged 69 years, 7 months and 23 days. The lines beneath his portrait say of him: Plate XLVIII. Oettinger's Bibl. Biogr. col. 672.

"Thou art beloved of Cosmo, honoured also of Leo; Thou wast a learned physician, thou wast a learned historian."

He was an accomplished scholar, of considerable eloquence, and of acute as well as refined intellect. His first profession was that of medicine, which he practised with happy success. Afterwards he applied himself to history and biography, and besides the lives of pontiffs and princes of Italy, especially of the viscounts of Milan, he collected the eulogies and the portraits of the illustrious men who had become famous, whether for arms or literature. He wrote also a history of his own time, embracing a period of fifty years, and narrating the chief events in Italy, Hungary, Asia, Africa, and other regions. At the storming and pillage of Rome by the Spaniards under Charles de Bourbon, May 6th 1527, Giovio suffered great losses of valuable silver vessels, but from a Spaniard who had taken possession of them he obtained the restoration of his books and manuscripts. As a reward for his learning and virtues the pontiff bestowed upon him the bishopric of Nocera,* and "the mighty Cosmo, prince of the Florentines," invited him to his court and made him one of his counsellors. On his death in 1552 he was buried in the church of St. Lawrence, and before a more illustrious monument was raised to his memory the somewhat boastful inscription was painted on the wall: "Of Paulus Jovius the most famous writer of histories, here are deposited the bones until a sepulchre be erected worthy of his eminent virtues." A later inscription recorded that he was the glory of the Latin tongue and the equal of Livy himself.

As an emblematist his writings have already been mentioned. Of the work which Whitney sometimes follows the title and an illustration are given, which serve also for the next author whom we mention, Gabriel Symeoni. Brunet again may be consulted for an account of Giovio's writings.

SYMEONI, Gabriel, an Italian historian, was a Florentine, born in 1509. His emblems and those of Giovio are collected into one volume, of which the running title is, Tetrastichi Morali, Moral Stanzas. As a literary man, Symeoni possessed both powers and accomplishments, but he was of a haughty, capricious and exacting disposition. His early years were very precocious; at the age of six he was presented to Leo X. as a very extraordinary child; and his natural abilities were so well cultivated and improved that before reaching his twentieth year he was employed by the republic of Florence on a mission in which he had for colleague the celebrated Gianotti. Fêted at the court of Francis I. he endeavoured to gain that king's favour by flattering the vanity of the royal mistress, and his first verses, addressed to the duchess D'Etampes, were worth to him a pension of a thousand crowns. On his return to Florence he filled several employments, but after being imprisoned by the Inquisition he withdrew to Lyons in 1556, where and at Paris his Devices and Emblems were published in Italian, French and Spanish. He closed his career at Turin in 1570.

* Oettinger names another Paolo Giovio, as bishop of Nocera, who was born about 1530 and died in 1585. But Boissard's testimony to the contrary appears very decisive.

There was published by J. Burchard Mencke in Leipsic in 1727, A Dissertation on the Life and Writings of G. Symeoni, 4to, but I have not seen it.

As examples of Whitney's translations of Giovio and Symeoni we give their text to his emblems, p. 98 and p. 168*b*.

ALCIATUS, Andreas, if not in priority of time, yet from superiority of genius, must be placed first in the ranks of emblem writers of the sixteenth century. He was born at Alzato in the duchy of Milan, May 8th 1492, or, according to Oettlinger, May 1st, the same year with our English printer Caxton, and died January 12th 1550. Boissard's estimate of his powers and attainments was most favourable, reflecting indeed the opinions of his contemporaries: "Not only was he the most noble jurisconsult, but in all liberal learning, and especially in poetry, so experienced that he could vie with the very highest geniuses." Whether he was the son of a merchant, or of more exalted birth, it is recorded of him that from early years he applied himself diligently and very successfully to the study of jurisprudence. In his fifteenth year he composed his "Paradoxes of the Civil Law," and in his twenty-second graduated as doctor of laws. It was not long before he became the most eminent in his profession. In 1521, when lecturer on law in the university of Avignon, his auditory numbered eight hundred persons; but his honoraria or fees were paid so inexactly that he returned to Milan. Here however he raised up enemies, and in 1529 found refuge in France. The king himself was one of his hearers, and bestowed on him a pension of six hundred crowns, which was increased the next year to one thousand two hundred. But Alciat was avaricious, and Francis Sforza, duke of Milan, used means to recall him to his native Italy. Sometimes at Pavia or Bologna, and sometimes at Ferrara, he pursued his profession, and his fame continued to increase. He enjoyed the favour of duke Hercules d'Este; the pope, Paul III., gave him the office of prothonotary; Charles V. created him count-palatine and senator; and wherever he might lecture numerous scholars crowded around him.

His writings are very numerous and extensive, embracing a great variety of subjects, from Weights and Measures up to The most excellent Trinity. The Lyons edition of 1560 occupies five folio volumes, and that of Bâle in 1571 the same number.

These we pass over for that particular species of literature of which he may be regarded, if not the founder, as the most successful cultivator, and which under the name of emblem writing, from the year 1522, when at Milan he published his Book of Emblems, to beyond the middle of the seventeenth century, for nearly one hundred and fifty years occupied so important a position in the estimation both of the learned and of that wider public who read "for delight and ornament."

Besides other instances in our illustrations of the text of Alciat, and which are referred to their proper place in Whitney, we append a short specimen of the stanzas of Alciat translated or adopted at page 138 of Whitney:

Alc. Emb. 177.

Ex bello, pax.

En galea, intrepidus quam miles gesserat, & quæ
Sæpius hostili sparsa cruore fuit:

Parta pace apibus tenuis concepit in vsum
Alueoli, atque fauos, grataq; mella gerit.
Arma procul iaceant: fas sit tunc sumere bellum,
Quando aliter pacis non potes arte frui.

Of the various editions, above fifty in number, we present the title-pages and illustrative plates from the editions of Wechel (Paris 1534), of Aldus (Venice 1546), of Roville (Lyons 1550 and 1551), and of Plantin (Antwerp 1581). Nearly all have a motto, a device or woodcut, and explanatory stanzas of Latin elegiac verse. Roville's editions of 1550 and 1551, in Latin and Italian, are the most ornate, and dedicated "To the most illustrious Maximilian duke of Milan." They present the text without comment or remark, but each page has a very elaborate border. Plates VI. XVI. XVII. XVIII. XIX. XX. XXI. XXII.

To the editions which included and followed that of Plantin in 1574, the very learned and abundant comments of Claude Mignault were often appended or interwoven. Mignault was born near Digon in 1536 and died March 3rd 1606. Like our king Alfred, he was twelve years of age before he began learning, but by great aptitude and diligence he soon surpassed his schoolfellows. In early manhood, successively at Rheims and in Paris he explained the Greek and Roman authors, and gained a very high reputation for erudition and skill; and to these it is recorded that he joined "a rare probity." His commentaries display great learning, — certainly needed to trace out, as he does, the numerous sources from which Alciat had derived his mottoes and devices, and to illustrate by references to classic and other authors the frequent allusions in Alciat's stanzas to the mythology and history of past ages. Indeed the praise which Mignault bestowed upon Alciat might be equally applied to himself: "Let us carefully note and fondly praise his ancient learning; let us wonder at his knowledge of law; let us emulate his eloquence; let us, with the common consent of learned men, approve his concise way of speaking; let us venerate his most dignified yet most pleasing variety; in these we possess a treasure to be matched neither with gold nor with gems; — and by so much the more admirable, if we compare the choice jewels of learning that were his own with the ornaments of many others." Notæ Posteriores ad Alc. Emb. Leiden, 1614, p. 813.

Alciatus, however, had serious defects; vanity, avarice and self-indulgence tarnished his moral reputation: but as a lawyer and a man of learning his glory was continually increasing. To his professional studies and pursuits he always added the culture of literature; and it is said "few men ever united so many branches of knowledge or carried them to higher perfection;" or, as it is noted on his portrait,

> "Andrew to their ancient splendor restored the laws,
> And thence made counsellors more learnedly to speak."

To the same purport is the record on his tomb in the church of the Holy Epiphany at Pavia: "Qui omnium orbem absolvit, primus legum studia antiquo restituit decori," He completed the whole circle of learning, and was the first who replaced the study of the laws in its ancient dignity.

Materials for a much fuller biography of Alciat are mentioned by Oettinger. We have chiefly made use of Claude Mignault's Life, Boissard's, and the Biographie Universelle of Paris; also Chambers's Gen. Biog. vol. i. p. 348.

PARADIN, Claude, from whom Whitney borrowed several of his emblems, was an ecclesiastic, a canon of Beaujeu, whose birth and death are alike unascertained. His brother William, however, was born in 1510 and died in 1590. Claude published at Lyons in 1557 a Selection of Emblems, in French, from Gabriel Symeon and other authors. After several editions had appeared it was reprinted by Plantin in 1562, with the title "LES DEVISES HÉROÏQVES," which we have reproduced, because the copy used once belonged to Whitney, and contains both his autograph and his motto. Were the question gone into it might, perhaps, be ascertained with the same certainty as in Whitney's case which were the authors from whom Paradin's selection was made.

Brunet. Paris, 1863, tome iv. col. 358.

Plate VII.

Paradin generally explains his devices by a prose narrative or remark; but to show his style we subjoin an example in which both prose and verse are combined, and which form the substance of Whitney's emblem, p. 88.

GORROZET, Giles, a man of genius and learning, who was born in Paris January 4th 1510, and died July 4th 1568. He carried on the business of a bookseller, but seldom affixed his own name to his writings. In early youth he enjoyed few, if any, advantages from study; but, besides other attainments, he mastered the Latin, Italian and Spanish languages. Thirty-four works are said to have been composed or translated by him, of fourteen of which Brunet gives the titles and editions. As a French poet he was equal to any of his time, and his tale of the "Rossignol" possesses very considerable beauty. The Tablet of Cebes and the Fables of Æsop were rendered by him into French rhymes, and he compiled also a work of considerable repute on the Antiquities of Paris. He amassed a large fortune by his business, and his son and grandson sustained his reputation as booksellers.

Manuel du Libraire, 1861, tome ii. col. 299-308.

The Hecatomgraphie, "an interesting little volume," says Dibdin, is a good specimen of his writings. By way of introduction he addresses an octain, "AVX BONS ESPRITZ & AMATEURS DES LETTRES." It is to the following effect: Plate XXXII.

"Whenever you shall be at your good leisure,
And neither care nor business longer find;
Whenever you shall wish to take some pleasure,
And give delight, by reading, to your mind:

When good examples you shall wish to know,
The morals sound of true philosophy,—
And what is needful in thy life to show;—
Read here, within this Hecatomgraphy."

UNIUS, Hadrian, who "conquered envy by study, uprightness and labour, and who at last had praise accorded to him worthy of his merit," was born at Hoorn in Holland in 1511. He pursued his studies at Haerlem, Louvain, Paris and Bologna, and in after life justified the titles bestowed upon him of being an able physician and a learned philologist. Whether he excelled as a poet may admit of a doubt, though, beside his emblems, he wrote verses on sacred subjects and an heroic poem on the marriage of Philip of Spain to Mary of England. He resided in England from 1543 to 1548, and dedicated to Edward VI. a Greek Lexicon, printed at Basle, to which he contributed above six thousand words. Holland was now his residence for a while, but he revisited England in 1553 or 1554 and remained only a short time. A few years afterwards he was appointed physician to the king of Denmark. Finally he settled at Haerlem, and received the appointment of "historian of the states of Holland." He presided over the college; but the loss of his library, consequent on the siege in 1573, greatly afflicted him, and he died in 1575. His works were numerous and on a variety of subjects, and the chief of them are enumerated by Boissard.

Plate XXVI.

In addition to the specimen of the stanzas of Hadrian Junius given before, we present another, translated by Whitney, p. 96:

Had. Junius Emb. 59.

"Filio suo Petro Iunio.

En tibi quas, fili, genituræ consecro testes Ceras, aucturas nomina amicitiæ.

Petram imitare iuuentus.

Sperne voluptates, iuuenis, constanter; vt iras
Ventorum, assultúsque maris Marpesiæ cautes.
Nate, tuo lepide ludens in nomine, dictas
Symbolico elogio, tu, Petram imitare Iuuentus."

PERRIÈRE, William de la, was a native of Toulouse. Of his birth and education we possess no information. His only literary monument appears to have been "Le Théâtre des bons Engins," published at Paris in 1539 by Denys Janot, the same printer as printed Corrozet's emblems. Both works "were composed in the quaint French verse of the time, and were accompanied by very beautiful woodcuts on a small scale. They were extremely popular." Plate XXX. J. B. Yates, 1849, p. 25.

The passages from Perrière are emblems I. and CI., from which a good idea may be gained of the work itself. The writer dedicates his work to the queen of Navarre, and speaks of himself "as a christian man writing to a christian princess." Of books like his own he declares: "It is not alone in our time that emblems are in renown, value and veneration, but from all antiquity, and almost from the beginning of the world." Several ancient authors are named by him (Chæremon, Horapollo and Lucan), and some modern (as Polyphilus, Celian Rogigien and Alciatus), thus: "In our time Alciatus has written out certain emblems and illustrated them with Latin verses," "and we, in imitation of the before-named, think we have well employed and appropriated our good leisure in the invention and illustration of our present emblems." Plate XXXI.

We may compare Whitney's, p. 205, with the following from Perrière:

"Pulchritudo sine fructu. Le Théâtre, &c. Emb. 65.

LE Cypres est arbre fort delectable,
Droict, bel, & hault, & plaisant en verdure:
Mais quât au fruict, il est peu proffitable,
Car riẽ ne vault pour dõner nourriture.
Beaucoup de gens sont de telle nature:
Qui portẽt tiltre, & nõ de grand sciẽce:
Mais s'il aduient d'en faire experience:
L'õ ne cognoist ẽ eulx que le seul bruict.
C'est grand folie en arbre auoire fiance,
Dõt l'õ ne peult cuillir quelque bõ fruict."

BOCCHIUS, Achilles, is simply named by Whitney in his Address to the Reader, and might be omitted from our notices, but our title-page and frontispiece are made up from his emblems; and therefore we Plate LII.

repeat what has been said of him by Joseph Brooks Yates: "Five years after the death of Alciato, a most beautiful book of emblems was presented to the world by another eminent Italian scholar, Achille Bocchi, commonly called Philerote. He was a native of Bologna, and sprung from a noble family of that city. Being equally distinguished for his scholarship and knowledge of public affairs, he served several Princes, and filled important offices in the court of Rome. In 1546 he instituted at Bologna an Academy, called after its founder Academia Bocchiana, and also (from the device of Mercury and Minerva, which it assumed) Hermathena. Bocchi's work, which was published in 1555, is entitled, 'Symbolicarum Questionum de universo genere quas serio ludebat, libri quinque.' The copper-plates, comparatively of a large size, are engraved by the celebrated artist Guilio Bonasone, after designs partly by himself and partly by Bocchi, aided by Parmigiano and Prospero Fontana, many ideas being taken from Michael Angelo and Albert Durer. On the publication of the second edition (1574) these plates, being much worn, were most of them retouched by a still more celebrated engraver, Augustino Caracci, then almost a boy. Both editions are scarce and much prized. The Latin verses of Bocchi are more remarkable for their beauty than their terseness."

Liverpool Lit. and Phil. Soc., 1849, p. 26.

Plate XXIII.

The portrait of Bocchius is from his works, in which are emblems, pp. 91 and 183, dedicated, "To the best of friends, Andrew Alciat," and "To Paulo Jovio, bishop of Nocera." In Bocchius himself, it is said there is more to be understood than is expressed, and that while others could paint the features he could paint the mind, for that pure mind alone can comprehend mind.

Plate XXXIV.

COUSTAU, Peter, or Costalius, issued at Lyons in 1552, and again in 1555, his rare and curious book, entitled "PEGMA, cum narrationibus philosophicis." The specimen given is "On the wretchedness of the human lot;" to which a few verses are added and then a dissertation, with each page elaborately ornamented, setting forth the nature of that wretchedness. Moral and religious reflections are interspersed.

Plate XXXV.

In 1560 the Pegma was translated from Latin into French by Lanteaume de Romieu, a gentleman of Arles. An emblem, p.

374, "Time does all," may have furnished Whitney with his last motto, "Tempus omnia terminat." One of the octains, addressed to the swan, and almost literally translated, possesses much simplicity:

"Honour nourishes the arts.

The swan melodious chants no lay,
Attempts no song of worth to sing,
Should zephyrs, breathing graciously
Over the fields, no sweetness bring:
And who desert from letters seeks,
Or undertakes some poet's theme,
If praise on learning never breathes,
Nor honours over labour beam?"

Whitney gave a very wide extension to his "Music of Orpheus," p. 186, but its substance is contained in Coustau's simpler lines:

"La force d'Eloquence. Le Pegme, p. 389.

De son gentil & fort melodieux
D'vn instrument, Orpheus feit mouuoir
Rocs & patiiz de leur places & lieux.
C'est eloquence ayant force & pouuoir
D'ebler les cueurs de tous part son scauoir
C'est l'orateur qui au fort d'eloquence
Premierement souz meme demourance.
Gens bestiaulx, & par ferocité
Les assembla: & qui à bienueillance
Les reuoqua de leur ferocité."

BEZA, Theodore, occupies a large space in the literary and theological history of his times, and according to the religious bias of his early biographers is spoken of with bitter aversion or with high regard. There can be no doubt that at one period of his life he was guilty of excesses and immoralities, but that in after years he became distinguished for his indefatigable zeal and labours in behalf of the Reformation, and deserved the respect which he obtained when Balzec named him "the great minister of Geneva." Plate LI. Histoire sur la Vie &c. de T. de Bèze.

He was born at Vezelai in Burgundy June 24th 1519, and died 13th October 1605; and for above forty years occupied a high position among the Reformed in Switzerland. Nearly the whole of his works were of a religious and theological kind; and on these his renown rests, and not on the small volume of emblems contained in about 90 pages, though these are beautiful in execution and illustrated by verses of considerable neatness and piquancy.

Plates XLI. and LIX.

At a very early age he was brought to Paris, and the care of his education was undertaken by his uncle Nicholas de Bèze; and in his tenth year he was sent to Orleans to be instructed by Melchior Wolmar, an excellent Grecian, with whom he remained about seven years in Orleans and in the university of Bourges. Like some others, who in after life wrote emblems, his first studies were those of law, but he soon began chiefly to attend to classical literature. In 1539 at Paris he obtained his degree of licentiate of civil law, and passed several of the succeeding years amid the gaities of that capital, externally conforming to the Catholic church, in which he enjoyed some valuable benefices. A severe illness induced serious reflection; he fled from France, avowed his faith, and was married at Geneva in 1548. In 1549 he received the appointment to the Greek professorship at Lausanne, and here, by the addition of one hundred psalms, completed Marot's translation into French verse, and made the translation of the New Testament into Latin, which passes by his name; it was published at Paris in 1557. He was admitted as a Protestant minister in 1559, and soon after became Calvin's assistant in lecturing on theology; and in 1561 he was delegate from the university of Geneva to attend the conference of Poissy to effect, if possible, a reconciliation between the Catholic and Protestant churches of France. On Calvin's death in 1564 he succeeded to his important offices, and until 1597 continued to discharge them with eminent zeal and ability; the infirmities of age then came upon him, though to the very last his mind continued bright and clear. He died at the age of 86.

Manuel du Libraire, tome i. pp. 841-844

His works are very numerous, though now almost forgotten. For the titles of these Brunet may be consulted; and for biographies of Beza, Oettinger's list, the Paris Biographie Universelle, or the article Beza in the Penny Cyclopædia.

Bib. Biogr. Univ. 1854, col. 149.

The twenty-four lines in Whitney, p. 165, appear founded on these four lines in Beza:

"POST AMARA DULCIA. Icones, Emb. 33.

In cauto quicunque rosas, collegerit vngue,
Vix vnquam illæso legerit vngue rosas.
Hoc sapite exemplo locupletes, plurima namque
Hisce latent vestris specula mixta rosis."

ANEAU, Barthelemi, latinised into Anulus, whose device was a signet ring, was a Latin and French poet, a jurisconsult and an orator. He was born at Bourges at the beginning of the sixteenth century and died in 1565. In the year 1530 he was professor of rhetoric in Trinity College, Lyons, and principal of that institution in 1542.

Among his works are — "The Mystery of the Nativity," and "The Merchant of Lyons;" the latter is a French satirical drama, in which nine characters are introduced and the events of Europe narrated from 1524 to 1540. Aneau, in 1549, translated into French the emblems of Alciatus verse by verse, and also the Utopia of sir Thomas More. His own emblem-book, "PICTA POESIS," Pictured Poetry, was collected by him and published at Lyons in 1552. A French translation was set forth at Paris in the same year. The original has some Greek stanzas interspersed with the Latin. The first of his emblems bears the inscription, "DIVINI SPIRITVS INVOCATIO," An Invocation to the Divine Spirit, and may be accepted as a fair specimen of the author's power and method: Plate XXXIII.

"Every gift that is good, — perfect in blessedness,
From the Father of Light cometh down from the sky;
Let therefore the Poet who his work would set in order,
Invoke first of all divine help from on high.
We, verses adorning with pictures, most earnestly pray,
That God may shine on us, with fires of the heavenly day."

Aneau's death was very tragical. On the 21st of June 1565, being the Fête de Dieu, a stone had been thrown from one of the college windows as the Holy Sacrament was passing: it hit the priest who was carrying the Host, and the irritable populace broke into the college and massacred Aneau, believing him to be a Protestant and the author of the outrage.

Whitney's emblem, p. 141, shows how greatly on some occasions he amplified the text of his author. Whitney gives thirty-six lines, Anulus only four; but those four are correctly rendered in Whitney's first stanza:

Picta Poesis, p. 18.

"PERFIDUS FAMILIARIS.

PER medium Brasidas clypeum traiectus ab hoste;
Quoque foret læsus ciue rogante modum.
Cui fidebam (inquit) penetrabilis vmbo fefellit,
SIC AVI sæpe fides credita: proditor est."

Oettinger, col. 509.

AERNO, Gabriello, an Italian poet, was born at Cremona, and died 17th November 1561 in the prime of life. He was a man much beloved and admired. His scholarship was sound and extensive, and even the fastidious Bentley republished entire his notes on Terence. Though the name of Emblems is given to one of his works, it is, more properly, a book of very elegant Latin fables. They were written at the request of pope Pius IV., by whom the author was highly regarded. They are remarkable for correct Latinity, and for the power of invention which they display. Indeed the charge was made, though altogether groundless, that his fables "are written with such classic purity, as to have given rise to an opinion, that he had discovered and fraudulently availed himself of some of the unpublished works of Phædrus."

Plate XXVII.

Emb. 72, p. 168.

We subjoin one of his fables, with which the translation by Whitney, p. 157, may be compared:

"Astrologus.

OBSCURA astrologus graditur dum noctes in umbra
Intentus cœlo, & tacite labentibus astris,
Decidit in puteum: casuque afflictus iniquo
Implorabat opem, Divosque hominesque ciebat.
Excitus accessit pictei vicinus ad oras
Salsus homo: & Quæ nam hæc tua tam præpostera, dixit, Dissita tam longe profiteris sidera nosse.
Quid rerum caussas, naturaeque abdita quaeris,
Ipse tui ipsius propriaeque oblite salutis."

SAMBUCUS, John, "physician, antiquary and poet," "both stirs up the sound by his writings, and mighty in skill restores the sick by his medical art." He was born in the town of Tornau in Hungary in the year 1531. He studied with great credit to himself in several of the academies of Italy, France and Germany; and as in his special profession of medicine so in the knowledge of ancient philosophy and in the pursuit of literature generally he attained high repute. He was patronised by the emperors Maximilian II. and Rudolph II., and under them he held the offices of counsellor of state and of historian of the empire. After a life of usefulness and honour, he died at Vienna on the 13th of June "in the year of salvation M.D.LXXXIII." at the age of 53. Plate LIII. De Bry's Icones, pt. iii. ed. 1598, pp. 76-83.

The catalogue of his works, as prepared by himself and set forth in Boissard's life of him, is very extensive and of great variety,—from a simple exposition of the Lord's prayer to the harangues of Thucydides and Xenophon artistically explained. His principal or more important works were: Lives of the Roman Emperors; A History of Hungary; Portraits of Physicians and Philosophers, sixty-seven in number, with their lives; and translations into Latin of Hesiod, of the Battle of the Frogs, and of portions of Plato.

His emblems, of which there are at least five editions from Plantin's press, here chiefly demand our notice. They contain much that is original, but are not equal to those of Alciat in purity of style and in vigour of expression. With respect to Whitney's translations and appropriations from Sambucus, it is to be especially remarked they are very far from approaching the literal meaning; they are paraphrases, or accommodations—the carrying out of thoughts and hints which the Hungarian supplied. This may be illustrated from Whitney's emblem, p. 206, of which we give the original: Brunet's Manuel, 1864, tome v. col. 104.

Plate XXXVIII.

FREITAG, Arnold, is a name to be recorded with honour, if we have respect to the beautiful work to which he contributed the descriptions and remarks in Latin, "MYTHOLOGIA ETHICA," or Moral Philosophy taught in Fables; but the notices of him with which we have met are very brief and unsatisfactory. There have been several distinguished physicians of the name Freitag, and Arnold seems to have been one of them. He was born at Emmerick, and, if a little before 1560, was very young when he wrote the Latin expositions of the engravings by Gerard de Jode and others which adorn his work. Foppens makes him professor of medicine at Groningen, but the university there was not founded until 1615, and the honour came to him therefore at a late period of his life. Among his works are mentioned some translations from Italian and Spanish treatises on Food and Drink, and The Medicine for the Soul, or the Art of Dying. He also translated Duplessis-Mornay's work, On the Truth of the Christian Religion.

Biog. Universelle, vol. xvi. p. 59.

* See Chambers's General Biographical Dictionary, vol. xxvii. p. 86.

Two plates set before the reader the nature of the illustrations in the Ethical Mythology: the one is the phœnix, applied as a type of Jesus Christ and as an emblem of the resurrection; and the other, in the fable of the Grasshopper and Ants, "the opposite rewards of industry and sloth," sets forth the proverb, "The sluggard refused to plough by reason of the cold, therefore will he beg in harvest and it shall not be given him." (Prov. xx. 4.) Plates XXXIX. and XL.

REUSNER, Nicholas, like others of the emblem writers, was a man of extensive learning, a jurisconsult and a poet. He was born at Lemberg in Silesia February 2nd 1545, a little before Whitney, and he died at Jena April 12th 1602. He was a member of one of the most distinguished families of his native province. His law studies were pursued at Leipsic, and in 1565, at the age of 20, he lectured, or rather gave lessons, on Latin literature at Augsburg. The duke of Bavaria named him professor of Belles Lettres at the college of Launingen, of which afterwards Reusner became rector. He filled in succession several literary offices at Bâle, Spires and Strasburg; and in 1589 his reputation called him to Jena, a university founded in 1550, and to which he rendered important services. In a solemn assembly the emperor Rudolph II. decreed to him the poetic crown, and created him count-palatine. From the electorate of Saxony in 1595 he was deputy to that diet in Poland where the German princes formed a league against the Turks. He died during his second rectorate in 1602, and was buried in a tomb which he had caused to be constructed for himself, and of which the inscription gave little evidence of a humble, christian mind. His funeral sermon was preached by Mylius. Dominik Animæus and Thomas Sagittarius collected and published the facts of his parentage; and John Weitz set forth his life, in a quarto, at Jena in 1603. Plate LIV. Oettinger, 1854, col. 1515.

Reusner's works are fifty-eight in number; and we might say, more or less, for the number signifies little, when so many have passed away from observation. It is with his poetical works we have to do, — the first of which is entitled "POLYANTHIA, sive Paradisus poeticus," from which Whitney makes several quotations. These flowers of poetry are given in seven books, printed at Bâle, in octavo, 1579. The second poetical effusion was edited by his brother Jeremiah, and issued by the celebrated printer John Feyerabend of Frankfort in 1581. The emblem XXX., p. 142, "Man is a wolf to man," may have given Whitney his motto, p. 144, but supplies very few of the thoughts. Another emblem writer, whose name has escaped my memory, adopts the contrary sentiment, and heads his device, Homo homini Deus, Man is a God to man. A better instance is the following, which Whitney, p. 48, renders with some degree of accuracy:

Emb. Reusneri, p. 88.

"FIRMAMENTUM FAMILIÆ VXOR.

Cernis, vt obliquo funem vir torquet ocno:
Quo rabidem pascit turpis asella famem.
Sedulitas quorsum prodest, & cura mariti:
Prodiga si coniux est sine fruge domi?
Non minor est virtus, quam quærere, parta tueri:
Hoc opus est viri: coniugis istud opus.
Magnum vectigal, vxorem viuere parcè:
Semper habet, semper quæ sibi desse putat.
Seruat fida domum coniux, & censibus auget:
Paulatim magnas prodiga carpit opes:
Quodq' magis miserum est, vrit sine torre maritum:
O pereat, gaudet lædere si qua virum."

The number of emblem writers of the sixteenth century is by no means exhausted, but we are restricted by our subject to those who are supposed or proved to have contributed to Whitney's selection. Their biographies, brief though they are, suffice to show them as men of culture, of learning and of genius,—trusted and honoured in their respective countries, and still deserving of some record in the literature of modern times.

ESSAY IV.

SHAKESPEARE'S REFERENCES TO EMBLEM-BOOKS, AND TO WHITNEY'S EMBLEMS IN PARTICULAR.

NOVELTIES respecting Shakespeare's genius may naturally expect to be looked upon with suspicion, and fresh NOTES upon his writings are a trouble to us,—we can scarcely endure them; yet, though seldom alluded to and never systematically carried out, his knowledge of emblem art, as applied in books, is a truth not to be questioned by any who have examined the evidence. His peculiar aptitude for the appreciation of art of every kind, even of the highest, is proved by his exquisite judgment of the supposed statue of Hermione, of the adornment of Imogen's chamber, of the pictures introduced into The Taming of the Shrew, and of the wonderful charms of melody and song when Lorenzo discourses to Jessica; and no man could have written the casket scene in The Merchant of Venice, nor the triumph scene as it is named in Pericles, who had not read and studied the emblem literature of the sixteenth century.

Winter's Tale, v. iii. 14-34.
Cymbeline, II. iv.
T. of Shrew, Induction, ii. 47-58.
Mer. of Venice, III. ii. 114-128, v. i. 54.
Pericles, II. ii.

To accomplish this two sources were open to him, for both of which, in the opinion of Douce, Drake and Capel Lofft, he possessed competent scholarship: the one was, to read for himself the emblem-books of France, Italy and Belgium; the other, to make use of our English Whitney, a work representative of the chief emblematists of those countries, and published at the very time when Shakespeare commenced his wonderful dramatic career. There were also open to him a translation into English by Daniell of the Worthy Tract of Paulus Iovius, printed in 1585, and by P. S. of Paradin's Heroicall Devises, printed in 1591.

Act II. 7, 9.
Act III. 2.

It is also in the full spirit of emblematic art that the whole scenes are conceived and set forth in the Merchant of Venice, where are introduced the three caskets of gold, of silver, and of lead, by the choice of which the fate of Portia is to be determined:

"The first of gold, who this inscription bears,
'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire;'
The second silver, which this promise carries,
'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves;'
This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt,
'Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.'"

And when the caskets are opened, the drawings and the inscription on the written scrolls, which are then taken out, examined and read, are exactly like the engravings or woodcuts and the verses by which the mottoes and emblems are set forth. Thus, on unlocking the golden casket, the prince of Morocco exclaims:

"O hell! what have we here?
A carrion Death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll! I'll read the writing.
All that glisters is not gold;
Often have you heard that told:
Many a man his life hath sold
But my outside to behold:
Gilded tombs do worms infold.
Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your answer had not been inscroll'd;
Fare you well; your suit is cold."

For Example Plate XXXVII.

The prince of Arragon also, on opening the silver casket, receives not merely a written scroll, as is represented in all Symeoni's DISTICHI MORALI, or Moral Stanzas, but corresponding to the device or woodcut, "the portrait of a blinking idiot," presenting him with the schedule or the explanatory rhymes:

"The fire seven times tried this;
Seven times tried that judgment is,
That did neuer choose amiss.
Some there be that shadows kiss;
Such have but a shadow's bliss:

There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd o'er; and so was this.
Take what wife you will to bed,
I will ever be your head:
So begone: you are sped."

Shakespeare's emblems are thus complete in all their parts; there are the mottoes, the pictures, "a carrion Death," and "a blinking idiot," and the descriptive verses.

The words of Portia, when the prince of Arragon declares,

"I'll keep my oath, Patiently to bear my wroth," are moreover a direct reference to the emblems which occur in Giles Corrozet, Gabriel Symeoni, Claude Paradin and Geffrey Whitney. The first adopts the motto, "La guerre doulce aux inexpérimentez," War is sweet only to the inexperienced, with a butterfly fluttering towards a lighted candle. The other three, with the same device, make use of Italian proverbs: Symeoni, of "COSI TROPPO PIACER CONDUCE À MORTE;" Paradin, of "Cosi viuo Piacer conduce à morte;" and Whitney, of "COSI DE DEN AMAR PORTO TORMENTO;"—Too much, or too lively a pleasure leads to death, and Thus love of happiness brings torment. In close agreement with these devices are Portia's words:

Plate XXXII.

Emb. p. 219.

"Thus hath the candle singed the moth.
O, these deliberate fools! when they do choose
They have the wisdom by their wit to lose."

The opening of the third of the caskets, that of lead, is also as much an emblem delineation as the other two,—surpassing them indeed in the beauty of the language as well as in the excellence of the device. "What find I here?" demands Bassanio, and answers:

"Fair Portia's counterfeit! What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move those eyes?
Or whether, riding on the balls of mine
Seem they in motion? Here are sever'd lips,
Parted with sugar-breath: so sweet a bar
Should sunder such sweet friends. Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider, and hath woven
A golden mesh to entrap the hearts of men,
Faster than gnats in cobwebs: but her eyes,—

How could he see to do them? having made one,
Methinks it should have power to steal both his
And leave itself unfurnish'd. Yet look, how far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In under-prizing it, so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance. Here's a scroll,
The continent and summary of my fortune."
[Reads:] "You that choose not by the view,
Chance as fair, and choose as true!
Since this fortune falls to you,
'Be content and seek no new.
If you be well pleased with this,
And hold your fortune for your bliss,'
Turn you where your lady is,
And claim her with a loving kiss.'"

In these scenes of the casket, therefore, Shakespeare himself is an emblematist, and only the woodcut or the engraving is needed to render those scenes as perfect examples of emblem writing as any that issued from the pens of Alciat or of Whitney. The dramatist may have been sparing in his employment of this tempting kind of illustration; yet, with the instances before us, we must conclude that he knew well what emblems were, and, most probably, had seen and was bearing in mind the emblem literature of that age.

Pict. Shakespeare, Vol. supplemental, pp. 13, 118 and 115.

But the probability rises to certainty when with Knight and other writers we believe that Pericles was, in the main, Shakespeare's composition, or, as Dryden expresses the fact,

"Shakespeare's own muse his Pericles first bore."

Books of emblems indeed are not mentioned by their titles and names, nor so quoted as we are accustomed to make quotations, by direct and specific references; but the allusions are so plain, the words so exactly alike, that they cannot be misunderstood. The author of Pericles was of a certainty acquainted with more than one emblem writer in more than one language, and very probably possessed greater familiarity with Geffrey Whitney's "Choice of Emblemes" than with any other. We may reasonably conclude that he had them before him, and copied from them, when he prepared the second scene of the second act of Pericles.

The whole of that second scene we will give, and then comment upon the parts. The dialogue is between Simonides, king of Pentapolis, and his daughter Thaisa, on occasion of the "triumph" or festive pageantry which did honour to her birthday: Pericles, II. ii.

"Enter a Knight: he passes over the stage, and his Squire presents his shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth present himself?
Thai. A knight of Sparta, my renowned father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is a black Æthiop, reaching at the sun:
The word, Lux tua vita mihi.
Sim. He loves you well that holds his life of you.
[The second Knight passes.
Who is the second that presents himself?
Thai. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is an armed knight that's conquered by a lady:
The motto thus in Spanish, Più per dulçura que per fuerça.
[The third Knight passes.
Sim. And what o' the third?
Thai. The third of Antioch,
And his device a wreath of chivalry:
The word, Me pompæ provexit apex.
[The fourth Knight passes.
Sim. What is the fourth?
Thai. A burning torch, that's turned upside down:
The word, Quod me alit, me extinguit.
Sim. Which shows that beauty hath this power and will,
Which can as well inflame as it can kill.
[The fifth Knight passes.
Thai. The fifth, an hand environed with clouds,
Holding out gold that's by the touchstone tried:
The motto this, Sic spectanda fides.
[The sixth Knight passes.
Sim. And what's the sixth and last, which the knight himself
With such a graceful courtesy delivered?
Thai. He seems a stranger: but his present is
A wither'd branch, that's only green at top:
The motto, In hac spe vivo.

Sim. A pretty moral:
From the dejected state wherein he is,
He hopes by you his fortune yet may flourish."

It needs but a simple act of comparison between this dialogue in Pericles and the pages of an emblem writer to establish the indebtedness of the dramatist to those who, in setting forth their fables or other allegories, were aided by the skill of the designer and the art of the engraver. Take either page 138 of Whitney or page 35 of Gabriel Symeoni: the torch engraven and the motto displayed are identical — except in a single word, qui for quod — with those of the fourth knight in the triumph scene of Pericles; and the writer of that scene must have known them. The copying is so evident, that it does not even require an acknowledgment. Let us however pursue the subject in due order, and we shall see the fact brought out even more clearly.

Plate LVII. Paradin.

After considerable research, through above twenty different books of emblems preceding the time of Pericles, I have met with none containing the devices of the first and of the sixth knight; and we may assign these to Shakespeare's own invention. The motto of the old family of the Blounts, Lux tua vita mea, Thy light my life, is very close to that of the first knight; but their crest is an armed foot on the sun, not a black Æthiop reaching towards him. Emblems of Hope are found in great abundance;* but the source of the device and motto of the sixth knight also remains undiscovered. We may conjecture that Shakespeare, having read Spenser's "Shepheard's Calender," published in 1579, did — from the line, January (l. 54),

Moxon's Spenser, p. 365.

"Ah, God! that love should breed both ioy and paine;"

and from the Italian emblem, as Spenser names it, "Anchora speme," Hope is my anchor, — did compose for himself the sixth knight's device, "In hac spe vivo," In this hope I live. The step from applying the emblems of other writers to the construction of new ones would be but small, and the dramatist would find it no trouble to contrive for himself what was needed for the completion of his "triumph."

* In a little later age (1636) there issued "from the Plantinian office of Balthasar Moretus at Antwerp" a volume containing no less than thirty emblems of Hope alone: the title is, "GVILIELMI HESI Antverpiensis, è Societate IESV EMBLEMATA SACRA DE FIDE, SPE, CHARITATE." 24mo, pages 404.

The case is different with respect to the other four emblems; for these we can trace to their sources. The second motto Shakespeare gives in Spanish, More by gentleness than by force. The Spanish emblem-books, by Francisco Guzman in 1587, by Hernando de Soto in 1599 and by Don Orozco in 1610, do not contain the motto in question, and could not be adduced as testimonies even if they did; but a near approach to it exists in "Los Emblemas da Alciato traducidas en rhimas Españolas." "En Lyon por Girlielmo Rovillio, 1549," 8vo; The Emblems of Alciatus translated into Spanish Rhymes, &c. On page 124, corresponding with Alciat's 180th emblem, occurs the motto, Ed. 1581, Antv. p. 621. "Que mas puede la eloquençia que la fortaliza," Eloquence or persuasion rather than force prevails,—the very idea which the second knight expresses.

But, although I fail to discover Shakespeare's Spanish motto in a Spanish emblem-book, I meet with an exactly literal expression of it in a French work of extreme rarity, Corrozet's Plate XXXII. "Hecatomgraphie," published at Paris in 1540. There, at emblem 28, "Plus par doulceur que par force," More by gentleness than by force, is the saying which introduces the old fable of the sun and the wind, and of their contest with the traveller. A symbolical woodcut is appended, and the stanza—

> "Contre la froidure du vent,
> L' homme se tient clos & se serre,
> Mais le Soleil le plus souuent > Luy faict mettre sa robe à terre;"

which may be pretty accurately translated thus:

> "Against the wind's cold blasts
> Man draws his cloak around;
> But while sweet sunshine lasts,
> He leaves it on the ground."

Now as the motto of the second knight existed in French so early as 1540, and as emblem-books were translated into Spanish nearly as early, it is very probable, though we have not been successful in tracing it out, that the author of Pericles,—Shakespeare if you will,—copied the words from some Spanish emblem-book that had come within his observation, and which applied the proverb to woman's gentleness subduing man's harsher nature. Future inquiries will, perhaps, clear up this mystery and name the very work in which the Spanish saying, "Più per dulçura que per fuerça," is original.

Three or four sources are open to which we may trace the mottoes and devices of the third, fourth and fifth knights. Shakespeare may have handled, probably did handle, some one of the various editions of Claude Paradin's and Gabriel Symeoni's "Devises Héroïqves," which appeared at Lyons, at Paris and at Antwerp between the years 1557 and 1590; or, as Francis Dousa supposes, may have seen the English translation, published in London in 1591; or, with greater probability, may have used the emblems of his own countryman Geffrey Whitney, bearing the date 1586.*

Illustrations of Shakespeare, pp. 302, 393. Plate LVI.

The third knight, he of Antioch, has for his device "a wreath of chivalry,"

"The word, ille pompæ provexit apex," i.e. The crown at the triumph carried me onward. Les Devises Héroïqves contains the wreath and the motto exactly as Shakespeare quotes them; but in Paradin a long account follows of the nature of the wreath and of the high value accorded to it in Roman estimation. "It was the grandest recompense or the greatest reward which the ancient Romans could think of, to confer on Chieftains over victorious armies, or Emperors, Captains, or victorious knights."

Fol. 146, or p. 292.

* We must not however forget another English source which was open to the dramatist, and which I have named in my account of Early Emblem-books and their introduction into English Literature; it is "THE worthy Tract of Paulus Iovius contayning a Discourse of rare inventions both Militarie and Amorous called Imprese, whereunto is added a Preface contayning the Arte of composing them with many other notable devises. By Samuel Daniell late Student in Oxenforde. At London Printed for Simon Waterson 1585." In octavo, unpaged, 72 leaves in all including the title. This rare work, of which Mr. Stirling of Keir possesses a copy, and which is also in the British Museum, is without prints or cuts of any kind, except two or three initial letters of no great merit. It is therefore not so likely to have attracted the notice of Shakespeare as Paradin, Symeoni or Whitney. Indeed it is evident from Shakespeare's graphic lines, that he was describing from some picture or device actually before him. Nevertheless, as will be shown on pages 302 and 303, there is a very sound reason for concluding that Daniell's translation of Jovius was also known to the great dramatist.

Introductory Dissertation, p. 18.

Shakespeare does not add a single word of explanation or of amplification, which it is likely he would have done if he had used an English translation; but simply, without remark, he adopts the emblem and its motto, as is natural to a person who, though not unskilled in the language by which they are explained, is not perfectly at home in it.

But in the case of the fourth and fifth knights it is not the simple adoption of a device which we have to remark; the ideas, almost the very expressions in which those ideas are clothed, are also presented to us, pointing out that the dramatic poet had something more than stanzas or narratives in an unfamiliar tongue.

The fourth knight's device is thus described in Pericles:* Pericles, II. ii.

> "A burning torch that's turned upside down,
> The word, Quod me alit, me extinguit;
> Which shows that beauty hath this power and will,
> Which can as well inflame as it can kill."

Now the Italian stanza in the "TETRASTICHI MORALI" of Symeoni and Giovio is: Senten. Imprese, p. 35.

> "Nutrisce il fuoco à lui la cera intorno,
> Et la cera l' estingue, ô quanti sono, Qui me alit, me extinguit.
> Che dopó vn riceuuto & largo dono,
> Dal donator riceuon danno & scorno!"

To the following purport in English:

> "The wax here within nourishes the flames,
> And the wax stifles them; how many names,
> Who after large gifts and kindness shown
> Gain for the giver harm and scorn alone."

Reed's edition of Shakespeare presents the following note: Vol. xxi. p. 222.

"A burning torch, &c. This device and motto may have been taken from Daniel's translation of Paulus Jovius, in 1585, in which they are found."

The passage referred to is the following:

"An amorous gentleman of Milan bare in his standard a Torch Daniell's Worthy Tract of Jovius in finem.

* The idea of a torch extinguishing itself is also given in the lines: 1 Hen. VI. II. v. l. 122.

> "Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer, > Choked with ambition of the meaner sort."

figured burning, & turning downeward, whereby the melting wax falling in great aboundance, quencheth the flame. With this Poesie thereunto, Quod me alit me extinguit. Alluding to a Lady whose beautie did foster his loue & whose disdain did endamage his life."

Certainly if Daniell's translation had, like Whitney, presented a pictured emblem, there would scarcely be any way of escape from the conclusion that his work was the actual source of the fourth knight's device; but Shakespeare's description possesses so much apparent reality that we are upheld in supposing there was a pictorial model before him, and not simply a dead-letter narrative. His inventive power however was great, and Daniell's work may have taught him how to use it.

One fact decisively favours the conjecture that the motto, as quoted by Shakespeare, Quod me alit me extinguit, was derived from Daniell. The other emblematists, as Symeoni, Paradin, Paradin's translator, and Whitney, all read Qui me alit &c., but Daniell gives Quod me alit. And therefore, as far as the motto is concerned, Daniell may be regarded as the source to Shakespeare of "the word" to his fourth knight's device.

Dev. Héroïq. fol. 169. Plate LVII.

To the same motto, Who nourishes me extinguishes me, Paradin adds this little piece of history, amplifying Giovio:

"In the battle of the Swiss, defeated near Milan by the late King Francis, M. de Saint Valier, the old man, father of Madame Diana of Poictiers, Duchess of Valentinois, and Captain of a hundred Gentlemen, bore a standard whereon was a painting of a lighted torch turned downwards, and full of wax which kept flowing in order to stifle it, and the words, Qui me alit, me extinguit. Which device he feigned for love of a lady, wishing to show just in this way that her beauty nourished his thought, and also put him in danger of his life."

Douce's Illustrations, pp. 302 and 393.

Paradin's translation of 1591, P. S., has been advanced as the source whence Shakespeare's torch-emblem was derived; but it is very note-worthy that the torch in the English translation is not a torch "that's turned upside down," but one held uninverted, with the flame naturally ascending. This contrariety to Shakespeare's description seems therefore fatal to the translator's claim.

Plate LVII.

Whitney's Emb. p. 183.

Let us next consider Whitney's stanza of six lines to the same motto and the same device, premising that Plantin has used for the Whitney in 1586 the identical woodcut which he inserted in the Paradin in 1562:

"EUEN as the wax dothe feede, and quenche the flame,
So loue giues life, and loue, despaire doth giue:
The godlie loue, doth louers croune with fame:
The wicked loue, in shame dothe make them liue.
Then leaue to loue, or loue as reason will,
For louers lewde doe vainlie languishe still."

Here placing in comparison Symeoni, Giovio's translator Daniell, Paradin, Paradin's English translator, and Whitney, as illustrative of the fourth knight's emblem, can we fail to perceive in Pericles a closer resemblance both of thought and expression to Whitney than to the others? Whitney wrote,

"So loue giues life, and loue, despaire doth giue:"

and Pericles thus amplifies the line:

"Which shows that beauty hath this power and will,
Which can as well inflame as it can kill."

From this instance then we infer that Whitney's book was known to the author of Pericles, and that he has simply carried out the idea which had there been suggested to him.

But "the device" and "the word" of the fifth knight,

"an hand environed with clouds,
Holding out gold that's by the touchstone tried,
The motto this, Sic spectanda fides;"

So fidelity is to be proved,—may be regarded as identical with the device and the word presented by Whitney, and which he copies from Paradin. This emblem is in fact that which was appropriated to Francis I. and Francis II., kings of France from 1515 to 1560, and which appears among the "HIEROGRAPHIA REGVM FRANCORVM,"* inscribed "Franciscus II. Valesius Rex Francorum XXV Christianissimus." The device then follows and the comment: "Coronatum aureum nummum ad Lydium lapidem dextra hæc explicat & sic, id est, duris in rebus fidem explo-randam docet;" This right hand extends to the Lydian stone a coin of gold wreathed round (with an inscription) and so, that is, teaches that in times of difficulty fidelity is to be put to the proof. The coin applied to the touchstone in the "HIEROGRAPHIA" bears the inscription, "FRANCISCVS II. FRANCORVM REX;" but the engravings or woodcuts in Paradin and in Plate LVI. Whitney have the inscription, "FRANCISCVS DEI GRATIA FRAN. REX."

Whitney, in which he is followed, though briefly, in Pericles, describes the emblem itself, and says:

Emb. p. 139. "THE touche doth trye, the fine and purest goulde:
And not the sound, or els the goodly showe.
So, if mennes wayes and vertues, wee behoulde,
The worthy men, wee by their workes, shall knowe.
But gallant lookes, and outward showes beguile,
And ofte are clokes to cogitacions vile."

The comparison thus instituted between the authors who use the motto, "Sic spectanda fides," makes it appear, I think, that there is greater correspondence between Shakespeare and Whitney than between Shakespeare and Paradin, and therefore that Shakespeare did not derive his fifth knight's device either from the French emblem writer or from his English translator, but from the English Whitney, which had lately been published. Indeed if Pericles were written, as Knight conjectures, in Shakespeare's early manhood, previous to the year 1591, it could not be the English translation of Paradin which furnished him with the three mottoes and devices of the "triumph" scene.*

The fine frontispiece to Whitney's Emblems represents the arms of Robert Dudley: it is a drawing, remarkably graphic, of a bear grasping a ragged staff, with a collar and chain around him, and standing erect on the burgonet; a less elaborate drawing gives the same badge on the title-page of the second part of the Emblems. Most exactly, most artistically does Shakespeare ascribe the same crest, in the same attitude and on the same standing-place, to Richard Nevil, earl of Warwick, the kingmaker of history. Here is the dialogue between him and old Clifford, just after Warwick's taunting remark:

* Paradin in a great measure compiled his work from Symeoni, and therefore to old editions of Giovio we may look for further elucidation of this subject.

"War. You were best to go to bed and dream again, 2 Hen. VI. v. i. l. 196.
To keep thee from the tempest of the field.
Clif. I am resolved to bear a greater storm
Than any thou canst conjure up to-day,
And that I'll write upon thy burgonet,
Might I but know thee by thy household badge.
War. Now by my father's badge, old Nevil's crest,
The rampant bear, chain'd to the ragged staff,
This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet
(As on the mountain top the cedar shows
That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm)
Even to affright thee with the view thereof.
Clif. And from thy burgonet I'll rend thy bear,
And tread it under foot with all contempt,
Despite the bearward that protects the bear."

A closer correspondence between a picture and a description of it can scarcely be imagined. Shakespeare's lines and Whitney's frontispiece exactly coincide:

"like coats in heraldry, Mid. N. Dream, III. ii. l. 213.
Due but to one, and crowned with one crest."

A remarkable instance of similarity is found between Whitney and Shakespeare in the description which they both give of the commonwealth of bees. In this case Whitney's stanzas, dedicated "To RICHARD COTTON Esquier" of Combermere are original writing, not a translation, and the plea is inadmissible that Shakespeare went to the same fountain head, except in a single phrase; neither he nor Whitney follow Alciat,* who confines himself to four lines. The two accounts of the economy of these "creatures small" are almost equally excellent and offer several points of resemblance, not to name them imitations, by the more recent writer. Whitney speaks of the "Master bee"— Plate LVIII.

* Alciat's subject is "the mercifulness of a Prince," and, almost literally rendered, his expressions are in reference to his device of a bee-hive:

"That their ruler never will wound with the stings of the wasps,
And that greater he will be than others by a double-sized body;
He will make proof of mild empire and well ordered kingdoms
And that inviolable laws to good judges are entrusted."

Shakespeare of the king or "emperor;" both regard the head of the hive, not as a queen, but a "born king" or general, and hold forth the polity of the busy community as an admirable example of a well-ordered kingdom or government.

Emb. pp. 200, 201.

Referring carefully to Whitney's verses, bearing the motto in mind which he uses, "Patria cuique chara," Native land to each one dear,—by their side let us place what Shakespeare wrote on the same subject, the commonwealth of bees, and we shall perceive a close similarity in the thoughts, if not in the expressions.

Hen. V. I. ii. l. 178.

In King Henry V. the duke of Exeter and the archbishop of Canterbury enter upon an argument respecting a well-governed state; and the duke remarks:

"While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home;
For government, though high and low and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and natural close,
Like music.
Cant. Therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience! for so work the honey-bees,
Creatures that by a rule in nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king and officers of sorts;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home,
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad,
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds,
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor;
Who busied in his majesty surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey,
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
The heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone."

In a small way a strict correspondence exists between an expression in the quarrel scene of Brutus and Cassius and the emblems by Whitney and Beza of a dog barking at the moon. Whitney copied his motto and device and the first stanza from Alciatus, but his method of applying the fable from Theodore Beza. Alciat's lines are:

"By night, as at a mirror, the dog looks at the lunar orb: Ed. 1581, Antv. Emb. 164, p. 571.
And seeing himself, believes another dog to be there;
And barks: but in vain is the angry voice driven by the winds,
For Diana in silence pursues her course onward, — still on."

But Beza's lines have the exact aim of Whitney's — to reprove detractors and to declare that cavillers at right and truth chiefly succeed in showing their own perverseness. Thus Beza:

"The full orb'd moon, that views wide lands outspread, Plate LIX.
Despises barking dogs, — on high her zone:
So who Christ's servants blame, or Christ their Head,
Scorn's finger point to folly all their own."

Alciat's and Beza's thoughts are both united in Whitney, with additions of his own:

"BY shininge lighte of wannishe CYNTHIAS raies, Emb. p. 213.
The dogge behouldes his shaddowe to appeare:
Wherefore, in vaine aloude he barkes, and baies,
And alwaies thoughte, an other dogge was there:
But yet the Moone, who did not heare his queste,
Hir woonted course, did keepe vnto the weste.

This reprehendes, those fooles which baule, and barke,
At learned men, that shine aboue the rest:
With due regarde, that they their deedes should marke,
And reuerence them, that are with wisedome bleste:
But if they striue, in vaine their winde they spende,
For woorthie men, the Lord doth still defende."

The variations or the agreements among the three emblematists as to the dog baying at the moon we need not determine; from one or from all of them Shakespeare probably took the expression which marks the hottest part of the contention of Brutus and Cassius. Brutus demands:

"What shall one of us, Julius Cæsar, IV. iii. l. 21.
That struck the foremost man of all this world,

But for supporting robbers; shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes?
And sell the mighty space of our large honours,
For so much trash as may be grasped thus?"

and instantly exclaims, as if the device were before him,

"I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon
Than such a Roman."

Correspondences almost in scores might be given between Shakespeare and the emblem writers.* We close our account with one which we may trace through the English of Whitney, the French of Paradin, and the Italian of Symeoni. The device is a sculptor, with mallet and chisel, cutting a memorial of his wrongs into a block of marble, and above his head is the scroll and its motto, "Scribit in marmore læsus." Being wronged he writes on marble. The stanza from the Italian is:

Whitney, p. 183.

Symeoni. Plate XXXVII.

"Each one that lives may be swift passion's slave,
And though a powerful will at times delight
In causing others harm and terror's fright;
The injured doth those wrongs on marble grave."

In that scene of unparalleled beauty, tenderness and simplicity, in which there is related to queen Katherine the death of "the great child of honour," as she terms him, cardinal Wolsey, Griffith describes him as

Hen. VIII. vi. ii. l. 27.

"full of repentance,
Continual meditations, tears and sorrows,
He gave his honours to the world again,
His blessed part to heaven, and slept in peace."

And just afterwards, when the queen had been speaking with some asperity of the cardinal's greater faults, Griffith remonstrates:

* This assertion is not made unadvisedly. I went pretty thoroughly into the subject before announcing Whitney's Emblems for republication, and I have the results, illustrated by about 140 photographs from emblem writers, in a manuscript volume of nearly 400 pages, 4to, which I have entitled "THE EMBLEM WRITERS of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries, with the CORRESPONDENCES of Thought and Expression in SHAKESPEARE'S Works." Were I a younger man I might hope to set this volume before the public in a manner worthy of the authors between whom so many similarities and identities can be established.

"Noble Madam,
Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues
We write in water. May it please your highness
To hear me speak his good now."

Lavinia's deep wrongs were being written by her on the sand to inform Marcus and Titus what they were and who had inflicted them. Marcus was for instant revenge, but Titus counsels:

"You're a young huntsman, Marcus; let it alone, Titus And. IV. I.
And come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write those words,
And lay it by: the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands, like Sybil's leaves, abroad,
And where's your lesson then?"

How like the sentiments thus enunciated to the lines in Whitney:

"IN marble harde our harmes wee alwayes graue, Emb. p. 183.
Bicause, we still will beare the same in minde:
In duste wee write the benefittes wee haue,
Where they are soone defaced with the winde.
So, wronges wee houlde, and neuer will forgiue,
And soone forget, that still with vs shoulde liue."

"The famous Scenicke Poet, Master W. Shakespeare," may have been intimate with the Italian and French emblem-books, and from them have been supplied with the thought of "a leaf of brass," and of the records of "men's evil manners," and of "their virtues;" but there is a far closer similarity between him and Whitney: and allowing for the easy substitution of "brass" and "water" for "marble" and "dust," the parallelism of the ideas and words is very exact, and fully justifies the conclusion that Whitney's emblems were well known to Shakespeare.

For the sentiment of engraving our wrongs there may have been a common origin to which the emblematists and the dramatist had recourse, — it is a sentence written by sir Thomas More about the year 1516. Speaking of the ungrateful returns which Jane Shore experienced from those whom she had served in her prosperity, More remarks: "Men use, if they haue an evil turne, to write in marble, and whoso doth us a good turne, we write it in duste." Hist. of Rich. III.

The expressions are however of higher antiquity than any of these quotations. The prophet Jeremiah sets forth most forcibly what Shakespeare names "men's evil manners living in brass," and Whitney, "harms grauen in marble hard." "The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart and upon the horns of your altar." And the writing in water or in the dust is in the exact spirit of the words, "they that depart from me shall be written in the earth," i.e. the first wind that blows over them shall efface their names, "because they have forsaken the LORD, the fountain of living waters."

Jeremiah xvii. 1, 13.

It is but justice to Shakespeare to notice that at times his judgment of injuries rises to the full height of christian morals. The spirit Ariel avows that were he human his "affections would become tender" towards the shipwrecked captives, and Prospero enters into his feeling with a strong conviction:

Tempest v. i. l. 25.

> "Though with their high wrongs I am struck to the quick,
> Yet with my nobler reason 'gainst my fury
> Do I take part: the rarer action is
> In virtue than in vengeance: they being penitent
> The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
> Not a frown further."

And so I would end this subject by repeating those noble lines of a later writer, furnished me by a friend, the Rev. T. A. Walker, M.A., of Filey, late of Tabley, in which the sentiment of a free forgiveness of injuries is ascribed to the world's great and blessed Saviour:

> "Some write their wrongs on marble, He more just > Stoop'd down serene, and wrote them in the dust,
> Trod under foot, the sport of every wind,
> Swept from the earth, quite banished from His mind,
> There secret in the grave He bade them lie,
> And grieved they could not 'scape the Almighty's eye."

The references and coincidences adduced, and which I know of a certainty may be very easily enlarged, cannot be regarded as entirely accidental. I would not urge them all with full confidence, and I do not pretend to say that my examples must of necessity carry conviction with them. Their conclusiveness is a matter of opinion only,—if you will, a dogma, and not a doctrine, of my Shakesperian and Whitneian faith,—yet what I have thus opened is a very curious and interesting subject of inquiry.* I am but a pioneer, or rather a miner digging for precious stones; and possibly I may verify the experience of the jet-seekers at Whitby, cast up a whole mountain of rubbish to bring to light two or three pieces of ornament, or a single specimen of crystallized charcoal.

* Were it necessary I might go into a fuller and more critical examination of the question to which emblem writer specially certain of Shakespeare's devices are to be traced. We may affirm generally that the ultimate resort must be to Symeoni, Giovio, or Alciat. From their stores and instructions, and from those of Girolamo Ruscelli on the Invention of Devices, Coats of Arms, Mottoes and Liveries, and of Lodovico Domenichi "on what are named Devices of Arms and of Love," emblem writers of a later date than 1556 very frequently borrowed or invented. Plate LXI.

Indeed Ruscelli and, by implication, Giovio were the teachers to sir Philip Sidney of the "Gentle Art" of attaching pictorial illustrations to poesies, and of making an emblem complete by motto, device and stanza; and what that noble cavalier commended and followed would find a ready entrance to his countrymen. Through him the Imprese of the Italians became known in England, and it is not unlikely were communicated to Spenser in 1579, and afterwards to his successors Daniell, Whitney and Abraham Fraunce. See Note to Whitney's Emblem, p. 38.

Paolo Giovio's work on emblems bears the two titles of Dialogo, Dialogue, and Ragionamento, Discourse; but they are essentially the same. The latter however, in the editions of 1556 and 1560 has seven or eight pages of additional matter. Pictorial illustrations appeared at a later time. Plate LXI.

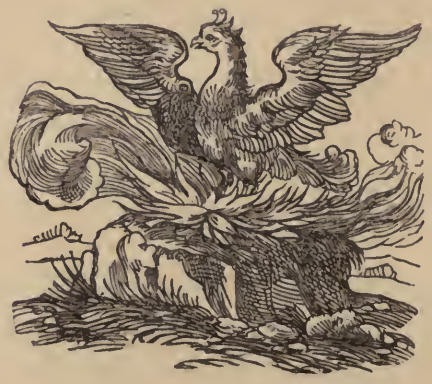
It was not from these fuller editions that Daniell executed his translation, but from the Roman edition of 1555, or from some similar edition, to which the translator has appended "certaine notable deuises both militarie and amorous, Collected by Samuel Daniell." It is in this additional part that the torch is named, "burning, and turning downeward," with the motto QUOD me alit, &c. Plate LX.

Of four editions of Giovio's Dialogo or Ragionamento — 1555 by Antonio Barre, 1556 and 1560 by Giordano Ziletti, and another of 1556 by Gabriel Giolito — no one contains the motto which Daniell quotes. That motto appears in 1561 in Symeoni's DEVISES OV EMBLEMES HÉROÏQVES ET MORALES, p. 244; in 1562 in SENTENTIOSE IMPRESE, p. 35; and in 1574 in DIALOGO DEL L'IMPRESE MILITARI ET AMOROSE, p. 200: but, as in Paradin and Whitney, the motto reads, not Quod, but Qui me alit. Daniell seems therefore to have made the alteration without authority. Plate LX. and LXI. Plate LXII. Plate XXXVI. Plate LXIII.

It could not however be from Daniell that Shakespeare derived any of his other emblems, for the burning torch is the only one which the translator of Giovio names. We return therefore to the conclusion, that Shakespeare read other emblem writers; and what work so likely to be read as one by his own countryman Whitney, selected and culled from the choice devices of French and Italian art?

For this note the reader is really indebted to William Stirling, esq., M.P. for Perthshire; for without the generous loan from his richly-stored library, of seven volumes bearing dates between 1555 and 1585, the editor would not have had the materials accessible for compiling what he has now put together.

However, I would have scholars work for every rational elucidation of "the sweet swan of Avon's" noble minstrelsy. If no other good be done, they who undertake such labours have their own spiritual perceptions enlarged; further light enters the mind's dark chamber, and the beauteous images there impressed may take such fixure that they can be reproduced for other men's instruction. But seldom have literary labours so confined an influence: their ramifications are almost infinite, and, though begun in curiosity, may end in a more perfect development of the writings of the great masters of human thought. Our loved teachers and instructors God's providence calls away from earth, but the diligent learners in after ages reap the fruits of patient study, and thus the seeds of genius wisely scattered grow up a richer harvest for the world.



NOTES

LITERARY AND BIOGRAPHICAL, EXPLANATORY OF SOME OF WHITNEY'S EMBLEMS AND OF THE PERSONS TO WHOM THEY ARE DEDICATED.

SECTION I. — Containing Part I. from Title-page to Page 104.

MBLEMS,—some of them,—not all; for only a few possess any immediate historical interest, or are attached to names that can confer celebrity. In the preparation of this work the editor indeed has traced to their originals in Latin, Italian, French, or German, above two hundred and twenty of Whitney's woodcuts and mottoes, and has collected and transcribed an equal number of passages from their respective authors, whose stanzas Whitney translates or imitates; but these correspondences are useful chiefly to the thorough student of the emblem writers, and by far the greater part of them are altogether passed over in these notes without being presented to the reader. Sufficient however will be retained to set forth the nature of the subjects, and to give an adequate idea of the manner of growth which the "Choice of Emblemes" passed through.

See Essay I. Sections I. and II. pp. 237-252.

Though it would be a work of labour, it might not be very difficult to rival Claude Mignault in his very learned Commentary on the Emblems of Andreas Alciatus, the father of this kind of literature. In these literary and biographical notices on Whitney, we might explain each of his phrases and allusions,—fortify the text by numerous and full quotations from the poets, historians and orators of Greece and Rome, — bring in the Christian fathers as auxiliaries, — and occasionally press into the service the hieroglyphics of Egypt and the customs of Jews and Arabians; yet, in the present day, to do this would be to abuse the privilege of an editor, and to make the reading of our book a burden rather than a recreation.

We shall therefore endeavour to confine our elucidations to points of interest; not indeed entirely eschewing the curious, but at times contenting ourselves with simply indicating the sources of fuller information, and not attempting to compile memoirs and histories in the entire completeness to which each subject might lead. Besides, we presuppose that readers of education are sufficiently familiar with classic literature and general history not to need telling anything about heathen divinities and heroes, nor requiring special narratives carried out into particulars concerning persons who are famous in the annals of their respective countries.

THE FRONTISPIECE.—Armorial bearings of "Robert Earle of Leycester." These are said to have been the subject of eight Latin hexameters in Morel's Commentary on Latin Verbs, published in 1583. The crest, The bear and ragged staff, may be traced out in Dugdale's Warwickshire to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, who died in 1434, and to one of the Nevilles, also earl of Warwick, in 1438. Among the monuments in the Lady chapel at Warwick there is a full-length figure of "Ambrose Duddeley," who died in 1589 earl of Warwick, and a muzzled bear is crouching at his feet. His brother Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, died in 1588, and on his magnificent tomb in the same chapel is also seen the cognizance of the bear and ragged staff. The arms however are a little different from those which Whitney figures. At an earlier date than 1586, the right-hand supporter, apparently a lioness, is represented with a single tail. If, as some say, the double tail be a mark of sovereignty, this frontispiece may lend support to the idea that Leicester really did make pretensions to supreme dignity in the Netherlands, and had even assumed one of its insignia. Motley, in his History of the United Netherlands, represents Deventer as urging that Leicester "might at once seize upon arbitrary power."

DEDICATION.—"ROBERT Earle of LEYCESTER, Baron of Den-

bighe," &c. A name of renown as the favourite of his queen, but rather of dishonour, because no ties, domestic or social, were allowed to stand in the way of his ambition. He was born in 1531, and died suddenly, it has been said of poison, September 4th 1588. His grandfather Edward Dudley, born in 1462, was one of the favourites of Henry VII., but through the fury of the people executed in 1510. John Dudley, the son of Edmund, was born in 1502, and his attainder in blood being removed he was created baron Malpas, viscount L'Isle, earl of Warwick, and finally duke of Northumberland, suffering death in 1553 for his disloyalty to Mary. Of his eight sons Guildford Dudley married the unfortunate lady Jane Grey, and the two were beheaded in 1554; Ambrose, Robert and Henry obtained distinction at the siege of St. Quentin in 1557, and for their services were received into Mary's favour.

When about nineteen years of age Robert Dudley married the ill-fated Amy Robsart, who died in 1560; in his twenty-first year he represented the county of Norfolk in parliament, and that same year, on the death of Edward VI., assisted to proclaim lady Jane Grey as queen, for which he was tried and received judgment of death, but was pardoned in October 1554. Soon after Elizabeth's accession in 1558 he obtained her favour, being constituted master of the horse, elected knight of the garter in 1559, and created baron of Denbigh and earl of Leicester in 1564. Many offices and honours were poured upon him. The university of Cambridge elected him high steward in 1563; the university of Oxford appointed him chancellor in 1564; the city of Chester made him their chamberlain in 1565; and the town of Great Yarmouth their high steward in 1572. The king of France conferred upon him the order of St. Michael in 1566. In July 1575 he entertained the queen for ten days at Kenilworth; and in 1578 he married the widow of Walter Devereux earl of Essex. In December 1585 he was sent as "Lorde Lieutenant and Captaine Generall of her Ma^ties^ forces in the lowe countries." The nature of his administration is most graphically described in the pages of Motley's History of the United Netherlands. That See vol. ii. administration soon came to an end, for he surrendered his authority and was again in England at the end of November 1586; but in June 1587 he conducted a considerable force for the relief of Sluys in Zealand, but the town was lost and the queen recalled him November 9th 1587, and appointed lord Willoughby in his place. The year 1588 saw him named lieutenant-general of the forces assembled at Tilbury to resist the invasion threatened by the Spaniards; but the same year in September also witnessed his splendid funeral in our Lady's chapel at Warwick.

His character belongs to the historians of his time. His praise and his dispraise have employed many pens in his own day and ever since. As Speed records; "He had been a Peere of great estate, but lyable to the common destiny of most Great ones, whom all men magnifie in their life time, but few speake well of after their death." Against "Discours de la vie abominable du my lord de Leicestre," we may set "Eulogium Rob. comitis Leycestrii," by Arnold Eickius; should we meet with "Traditional Memoires in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and king James," and note how bitterly Robert Dudley is spoken of,—or take up Drake's "Secret Memoirs," we may correct their prejudicial condemnation by consulting "The Life of Robert Earl of Leicester, the Favourite of Queen Elizabeth, drawn from Original Papers and Records." For a fair and just view of his life and actions the Athenæ Cantabrigienses may be read, or Aikin's General Biography.

Most of the events of his residence in Holland are set before us in the following works:

Leicester affected to be the patron of the fine arts, of literature, and of religion in the strict form of puritanism; and numerous and often curious, if not odd, are the books which asked favour from him. In the matter of Dedications there appears to have been a rivalry between himself and Essex, or rather between their respective partisans. If Whitney's praise of Robert Dudley seems to us excessive, that which Willet addressed to Devereux is scarcely under more restraint; for he speaks of him, as "noble, learned, the Mecænas and most excellent patron of all students, renowned not so much for the splendor of his race, as for the remarkable eminence of his own virtue." Willet's Sac. Emblematum, Centuria una.

An authentic portrait of Robert Dudley exists at Knole, the old seat of the Sackvilles, now the residence of the earl Amherst. It has been engraved, and occurs among Birch's "Heads of Illustrious Persons of Great Britain." Vol. i. p. 41.

Thomas Newton, a Cheshire poet, celebrated the earl's return from Belgium, and likened him to Solon, Nestor, Numa and Cato. A dozen Latin lines conclude with invoking him as > "Mighty count, of Britain's land the ornament immortal, > Deservedly to be numbered among magnanimous powers."*

Leland's Antiquaria, vol. v. p. 182.

As chancellor of Oxford or high steward of Cambridge, Leicester may have had Whitney's merits placed before him, for the poet was of both universities; but it is suggestive of the way in which the patron and the poet became acquainted that for twenty-three years, from 1565, the earl had been chamberlain of Chester. During this time, about the year 1578 or 1579, Leicester's good offices had been sought in a dispute between several Cheshire gentlemen and the dean and chapter of Chester cathedral. After something very like bribery the quarrel was settled by both parties joining in a surrender of the estates to the queen, who regranted them to the fee farmers subject to certain rents to be paid to the dean and chapter. Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. i. p. 56. The Lysons, p. 573. Ormerod, vol. i. p. 241.

In 1583 the corporation of Chester received the earl of Leicester with almost regal honours. He was accompanied by the earls of Derby and Essex and lord North, and was met by most of the gentry of the county. There were fifteen hundred horse in his train, and the numerous cavalcade was welcomed at the High Cross in Chester by the mayor and the whole council of the city. A present of forty angels of gold was made to the earl in a cup valued at 18*l.* The Lysons, p. 563. Ormerod, vol. i. p. 199.

It is easy to see how Whitney, a Cheshire man, with near relatives among the gentry of the county, might gain introduction to Leicester; he might be admitted even as one of his retinue, and in his service make the acquaintance, and probably secure the friendship, of Sidney, Russell, Norris and Jermyn.

VERSES CONGRATULATORY. — Of the five sets four are by persons to whom Whitney dedicated each an emblem, and of them a notice will be given in the proper place. BONAVENTURA VULCANIUS of Bruges is the only one whom we need here to mention. He was born in 1538 and died in 1614. "Whoever," says Peerlkamp, "has read the remarkable oration of Peter Curiaeus on the death of Bonaventura Vulcanius, of necessity will love him, as well for the choice virtues of his mind as for his attainments in literature of various kinds." After laying the foundation of learning at Ghent and Louvain, while yet a youth he went to Seville, and for eleven years was curator of cardinal Mendoza's library. Then he presided over the Gymnasium or Grammar school at Antwerp; and finally, about 1582, he was invited to the university of Leyden, and there taught Greek for the long space of thirty-two years. Here Whitney became acquainted with him, and was honoured by him with the complimentary stanzas in which the Geffrey of Elizabeth's reign is compared with the great poet of a former age, Geffrey Chaucer. In the library of the university there is a very fine portrait of Bonaventura Vulcanius, and also a manuscript by him of the Hymns of Callimachus. Among the Poems of James Dousa the younger are some Latin iambics on Bonaventura's publishing a work of Aristotle's and another of Apuleius. The Hymns of Callimachus and the Idylls of Moschus and Bion were printed at Antwerp by Plantin in 1584, — or rather at Leyden, where the great printer, fleeing before Farnese, had just established his office. An edition of Bonaventura's Apuleius was printed by Rapheleng at Leyden in 1594.

"D. O. M." Deo, Optimo, Maximo, To God, best and greatest.— In our modern times we shrink from such dedications; but it was with deepest reverence that the early emblem writers adopted them. There is a beautiful one by Willet, — his thirty-seventh emblem, — "Recte precanti praesto adest Christus," Christ instantly is present to him who prays aright. Of some Latin elegiacs on Exodus xxvi. 1, he adds this English translation, admirably expressing how we ought to pray:

Sacrorum Emblematum Centuria una.

"The curtaines wrought with pictures were,
hanging in holy place;

The Cherubs did with wings appeare,
and gave a goodly grace.
The house of prayer Angels frequent,
and Christ him selfe is there,
Then seeing these are alwayes present
We ought to pray with feare."

EMBLEM, p. 1.—"Te stante, virebo," While thou standest I shall flourish. According to the purport of Whitney's stanzas, the name and titles of queen Elizabeth should head this emblem; but probably, as the entire work had been dedicated to a subject, it was not considered a courtly thing to devote simply a page to the sovereign.

The device is from Hadrian Junius, but the motto from Claude Paradin. The object of Junius is to illustrate the saying, that "the wealth of princes is the stay of the people," and he applies to that saying a four-lined stanza: Plate XXVI*b*.

"The pyramids of Pharaoh-kings are monuments lasting for ages,
With wandering arms around them clasps the creeping ivy;
By the steadfast wealth of kings sustained are the needy people,
And the mind's constant steadfastness secures age-lasting powers."

Paradin gives us the origin of the device of the pyramid and the ivy. The cardinal of Lorraine, on going to his abbey of Cluny, erected his device at the gate: it is a pyramid with a crescent on the top, and surrounded from the base to the summit by a beautiful verdant ivy. The whole was accompanied by the following inscription: Devises Héroïques, Anvers, 1562.

"Quel Memphien miracle se haussant
Porte du ciel l'argentine lumière,
Laquelle va (tant qu'elle soit entiere
En sa rondeur) toujours croissãt?
Quel sacre saint Lierre grauissant
Jusqu'au plus haut de cette sime fiere,
De son apui (ò nouuelle maniere)
Se fait l'apui, plus en plus verdissant!
Soit notre Roi la grande Pyramide,
Dont la hauteur en sa force solide
Le terme au ciel plante de sa victoire:

Prince Prelat, tu sois le saint Lierre
Qui saintement abandonnant la terre
De ton soutien vas soutenant la gloire."

London, 1591, p. 87.

The English translation from Paradin, by P. S., gives the following version:

"O Readers tell what thing is ment
By tombes in Memphis towne,
Which on the top doth beare on high
The bright beames of the moone?
The moone which doth continually
Increase in light so bright,
Till that night come wherin her shine,
From world doth take her flight.
And what doth meane the sacred Iuy
Which creeps and binds about
This tomb, to whose high top he climbs,
Although it be full stout,
And what new fashion is this also
That leaning to it stickes,
Making his stay about the same,
That greenely ouer creepes.
This tombe it is that mightie king,
Whose maiestie honer craues,
For he in heauen triumphes for vs
To sathan that were slaues,
And the Iuie a bishop signifies
Euen thee most famous prince,
Who in a godly life doest yeeld
Not to the best an inch.
For though thy bodie lie in graue
Yet such thy vertue was,
That it beares vp our laud and praise
That neuer awaye shall passe." *

* Though restraining the application of this emblem, with the crescent moon, to the family of the Guises, namely to Claudius de Guise, cardinal deacon of S. Clement, and brother of Charles duke de Guise, the "Symbols Divine and Human of Pontiffs, Emperors," &c. gives an account rather different from that of Paradin, but combining essentially the same sentiments and setting forth the sovereign as the source and support of the glory of the subject. Mention is also made of the crescent moon being a military standard of the Turks, but assumed both saucily and foolishly, "for the moon which increases also grows old," "quæ crescit, senescit."

Frankfort, 1652, vol. ii. p. 6. Hierographia Cardinalium.

It will be seen that the ideas are adopted in some measure by Whitney; and this emblem of his supplies a good example of what is frequent with him, namely the accommodating of the thoughts of other writers to a subject not originally intended. Here he makes the device of the cardinal of Lorraine subservient to the praise of the English queen and of the Protestant church of England.

EMBLEM, p. 3.—Prouidentia, Providence. A motto and wood-cut from Hadrian Junius, whose few lines simply inform us "Where the sacred Nile shall flow upon the fields, there the prescient Crocodile lays its eggs away from the flood, with good reason admonishing us to see beforehand what the fates may threaten." The monogram G is in the centre of the cut from Junius, and is said to mark the workmanship of Hubert Goltzius; but this is doubtful, though it certainly denotes an artist who frequently engraved for the printers of Antwerp. The reader will observe how the borders in this edition of Junius are the originals of those in Whitney, and also how Whitney amplifies and improves upon the Latin stanza.

Plate XXVI*d*.

Annales de l'Imp. Plantin. pp. 42 and 48.

EMBLEM, p. 4.—"Veritas tempora filia," Truth the daughter of Time. A variation from the motto of Junius to the same device, "Truth by time is revealed, by discord is buried." Whitney's lines bring out the meaning much more effectually than those of Junius.—"Why, O winged Saturn, dost thou drag the naked maiden into the air? Why does the assembly of women overwhelm the furrow with piled up earth? Truth, daughter of Time, issuing forth from the cave, a three-fold plague appears to overwhelm,—Strife, Envy and Slander." This device was the badge of Mary Tudor when she succeeded to the throne.

Plate XXVI*c*.

EMBLEM, p. 15.—"Voluptas ærumnosa," Sorrowful pleasure. The sad fate of Actæon furnishes a subject to at least three of the emblem writers previous to Whitney; namely to Alciat, Aneau and Sambucus. Alciat adopts for motto, "In receptatores sicariorum," On the harbourers of assassins, and thus carries out his thought:

Plates VI. XX. and XXV.

"Unlucky for thee a band of robbers and thieves through the city,
Goes as companion: and a troop girded with direful swords.
And so thou a prodigal judgest thyself generous in mind,
Because thy pot of meat entices many of the bad.
Behold a new Actæon, who after he took up the horns
Himself gave himself a prey to his own dogs."

Aneau applies the fable of Actæon to him who, "Ex domino servus," From a master becomes a slave, and proves his text in Latin elegiacs:

Picta Poesis, p. 41.

"Cornibvs in ceruum mutatum Actæona sumptis,
Membratim proprij diripuere canes.
Nae, miser est Dominus, Parisitos quisquis edaces
Pascit, adulantum præda parata canum!
Se quibus irridendum suggerit, & comedendum,
Seruus & ex domino corniger efficitur."

Thus, if we please, to be rendered:

"Horns being assumed by Actæon changed into a stag,
Member from member his own hounds have torn him.
Verily, wretched is the master who feeds parasites voracious,
A prey is he made ready for those fawning dogs.
Himself he offers to whoever would mock and devour him,
And out of a master is he made a horn-bearing slave."

Plate XXV

Sambucus however supplies the motto which Whitney follows, and seems himself to have borrowed some of his thoughts from the Greek of Palæphatus, Concerning incredible Histories.* We give the sense of his stanzas:

"He, who follows the chase too eagerly, drains his paternal riches and lavishes them on dogs: so great the love of the vain sport, so great the infatuation continually becomes, that he puts on the double horns of the swift deer. Actæon's fate happens to thee, who having horns from thy birth hast by thine own dogs been torn in pieces. How many, whom the quick scented faculty of the dogs delights, does the passion for hunting finish and devour. Postpone not serious things for sports, advantages for losses, — regard whatever things remain as if thou wert destitute."

De Incr. Hist. Edition 1670, Cantab. p. 10.

* "To Actæon indeed, caring nothing about domestic affairs, and busied only with hunting, the means of livelihood failed; and when he had nothing left, people said: 'Poor Actæon! he has been eaten up by his own dogs.'"

It must be confessed that Whitney's treatment of the tale is superior to that of the other three; and the comparison thus carried out to some length may serve to vindicate for him greater clearness and unity of purpose. Emb. p. 15.

EMBLEM, p. 32.—"In pœnam sectatur & vmbra," Even a shadow is pursued for punishment. Beza's fourteenth emblem also treats of men pursuing shadows, but in a way considerably different from the method adopted by Whitney. The simple giving of Beza's meaning will make this apparent: Plate XLI.

"As a shadow flees those pursuing it and presses on those fleeing,—a shadow you know being added to bodies as their companion; So glory flees those coveting rewards of undeserved praise, and on the other hand is joined as companion to the humble in mind. And yet do these thoroughly prove by no false trial, what all this praise will be? Truly, but a worthless shadow."

On comparing the two the advantage will, I think, again be awarded to Whitney.

EMBLEM, p. 38.—"To the Honorable Sir PHILLIP SIDNEY Knight:" whom Spenser named—and whom, in his verses "To the Right Honourable and most vertuous Lady, the Countess of Pembroke," he lamented as—

—— "that most heroicke Spirit,
The hevens pride, the glory of our daies
Which now triumpheth (through immortall merit
Of his brave vertus) crown'd with lasting baies
Of hevenlie blis and everlasting praies;
Who first my Muse did lift out of the flore,
To sing his sweet delights in lowlie laies." Spenser's Works, Moxon's Edition, p. 7.

The world-renowned and ever-worshipful Philip Sidney was the son of sir Henry Sidney and of his wife Mary, the eldest daughter of John Dudley, duke of Northumberland. At the time of his birth, November 29th 1554, his mother was wearing mourning for her father, her brother, and her sister-in-law the lady Jane Grey, who had all died on the scaffold. He was born Pear's Memoirs, London, 1845.

at Penshurst in Kent, where still exist the ruins of the oak* planted at his birth. On Elizabeth's accession in 1558 sir Henry became lord president of the marches of Wales, and kept his court at Ludlow with much magnificence down to 1568. Hence his son Philip in 1566 was sent as a scholar to Shrewsbury school, and the very day, on which he and Fulke Greville (lord Broke) together entered, commenced the friendship between them which death alone terminated, and of which a loving memorial remains in Greville's Life of Sidney. At an early age, in 1569, when only fifteen, his student life began at Christ church college, Oxford, which he left in 1571 to travel for four years in France, Germany and Italy. It was only by taking refuge in the house of the English ambassador in Paris that he escaped the massacre on St. Bartholomew's day in 1572, when his friend and frequent correspondent Hubert Languet found shelter with Andrew Wechel the celebrated printer. A letter to Languet, written during this tour, shows that Sidney had made acquaintance with some of the emblem writers, for he mentions Girolamo Ruscelli's "Imprese illustri, con esposizione e discorsi," which was published in 1566;† and it may be that on his return to England he imparted his knowledge to Spenser, and to Whitney who was of the same university with himself.‡ In 1576 the queen appointed him her ambassador to the court of Rodolph, the new emperor of Germany. Spenser's acquaintance began about 1578, and probably in that year the poet of the Faerie Queene visited Sidney at Penshurst, and there wrote a portion of the Shepheard's Calender, dedicated "To the noble and vertuous Gentleman, most worthie of all titles both of learning and chivalry, Maister Philip Sidney." From 1579 he lived in retirement for two or three years either at Penshurst or at Wilton with his sister the countess of Pembroke. During this time he wrote what he entitled "The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia:" it was not published until 1590, four years after his death; and it owes its fame rather to the great renown of its author than to any peculiar excellence of its own. In this poem under the name of "Philoclea," and in his other poems under that of "Stella," he celebrated the virtues and charms of the lady Penelope Devereux, to whom he was fondly attached. The year 1581 numbered him as one of the knights of the shire for his native county, and a manuscript in the British museum records: "Sir Philippe Sidney dubbed at Windesor on Sonday the 13 of January 1582, and was that day lykewise installed for Duke John Casimir counte Palatine and Duke of Bavaria." In 1583 Frances, only daughter of sir Francis Walsingham, became his bride, and in her arms his noble spirit was breathed forth on the 7th of October 1586, after the fatal wound at Zutphen which has immortalized his memory. One daughter was the issue of this marriage, born in 1585, and afterwards wife to Roger, earl of Rutland. Sidney's widow was married to Robert, earl of Essex, beheaded in 1600, and again to Richard, earl of Clanricarde and St. Albans. It seems that in 1584 he had been listening to a project by sir Francis Drake for engaging in an expedition against the Spaniards in the West Indies, but the queen herself forbad him, and conferred on him the office of "Gouernour of the Garrison and toune of Vlissing." Old Fuller's quaint, fond, admiring testimony might very excusably detain us, but we give only a single sentence:

‡ His acquaintance with and practice of emblem art appear also from his conduct when, in 1579, a son was born to the earl of Leicester by his wife Lettice, the widow of Walter, earl of Essex. Sidney had hitherto been reputed the heir of his uncle's large possessions; but "on the first tilt after the birth of this child he bore on his shield the word speravi scored through." In the Arcadia also the mottoes and devices on the shields of the knights show both rich fertility of invention and a full knowledge of emblem writers. Besides, to denote that he persisted in any course of action once decided on he adopted as his device "the Caspian sea, surrounded with its shores;" and, alluding to this body of water neither ebbing nor flowing, his motto was, "SINE REFLEXV," Without an ebb, i.e. No going back.

The fancy is embodied in these verses, that on the death of the earl of Surrey —

And PALLAS, and the Muses sad, did weare a mourninge sute.
And then the goulden pen, in case of sables cladde

Sidney however is born, gladness and brightness again pervade the seats of Apollo and the Muses, and to him —

Wherewith, hee also gaue to him, the gifte for to inuente,
That, when hee first began, his vayne in verse to showe,

The profound grief for Sidney's untimely death may be judged of from the writings of his contemporaries and from the magnificent public funeral with which his remains were honoured. "His rare and never ending laudes" were the theme of many pens.* It will be enough in our brief notice to quote from Bamfield's epitaph printed in 1598:

Speed's record of him testifies he was "that worthy Gentleman, in whom were compleat all vertues and valours that could be required or residing in man;" and Baudart's Polemographiæ Auriaco Nassoviæ names him "the hero of thirty years, exceedingly well learned in languages and sciences" — "eloquent and courteous, one born for choicest honours."

His university education commenced at Corpus Christi college, Cambridge, and was completed at the Middle Temple. He was sheriff of Suffolk in 1574, and again (according to Suckling, vol. i. p. xlii.) in 1579; and by the death of his father April 7th 1578, and of his elder brother John, "he succeeded to Rushbrooke and other estates in Suffolk." It was during one of Elizabeth's progresses that he "was dubbed at Bury St. Edmund on Saturday the first day of August Anno 1578." On a former progress in 1571 he entertained the French ambassadors who attended the queen "so exceedingly sumptuous," that it is said they "marvelled most exceedingly." He was knight of the shire on two occasions, in 1585 and 1586.

gentleman, Sir Robert Jermin, one that hath declared euery way his hearty zeale and loue both to religion and to her majestie."

His zeal for religion indeed had before this caused Freake the bishop of Norwich to exhibit articles against him, and sir John Higham knt., and Robert Ashfield and Robert Badly esqs. .The complaint was that they favoured puritanism, to which in "A true answer," sent to lord Burghley, they replied that the charge was "old, weak, untrue, and malicious."

Worthies, vol. iii. p. 195.

The family of the Jermyns was seated at Rushbrook at the beginning of the thirteenth century. Fuller speaks of Robert Jermyn as "a person of singular piety, a bountiful benefactor to Emanuel college, and a man of great command in this county (Suffolk). He was father to sir Thomas Jermin (privy councillor and vice-chamberlain to king Charles the First), grandfather to Thomas and Henry Jermin, esquires: the younger of these being lord chamberlain to our present queen Mary, and sharing in her majesty's sufferings during her long exile in France, was by king Charles the Second deservedly advanced Baron, and Earl of St. Albans." In the Magna Britannia it is asserted "there is hardly a man in England of the name of Jermyn."

EMBLEM, p. 46.—To Sir HENRY WOODHOWSE Knight. The Woodhouses or Wodehouses of Kimberly in Norfolk "were Gentlemen of good Ranke, in and before the Time of King John." Members of the family, either attended the Black Prince into Spain, or fought with Henry V. in 1415 at the battle of Agincourt, or served under Edward IV. at the fight of Tewkesbury;—and one was slain at Muselborough 10th September 1547. They were of a stock that bore very abundantly the honours of knighthood, when that dignity was almost a sure test of personal merit. By nearly twenty descents we arrive at "Sir William Woodhouse belonging to the shippes," who was knighted in the "triumphant reigne of Kinge Henry the eight" "on the 11 day of May Sunday after the destruction of Edenborouge and other townes;" he bore for his crest a woodman with a club. "In the happy reigne of Kinge Edward the sixt," sir Thomas Woodhouse received the same honour "by the handes of Edward Duke of Somersett Lord Protector." Sir Roger Woodhouse graces "the tyme of the reigne of Queene Mary;" and his second brother, the sir Henry Woodhouse of Whitney's Emblems, was "dubbed" "on tuesday the 26 of August 1578;" and "on the 27 of August 1578" another sir Roger Woodhouse, who died in 1588.

Sir Henry Woodhouse "was born 3 Jan. 1546." The time of his death is not ascertained. At his baptism "SIR JOHN ROBSART and his Lady answered for him; he was (as all his Ancestors for many Generations always were) Justice of the Peace, and twice Member for the County of NORFOLK, viz. in the 14 and 31 Eliz." Blomfield, vol. i. p. 761.

A Mr. Ralph Woodhouse was one of the bailiffs of Great Yarmouth in 1580, and sir Roger Woodhouse, knt., in that year was one of "the respectable company" whom Whitney names as joining in the pic-nic to Scratby island. From Camden's Elizabeth, anno 1590, we learn that "Philip Woodhouse was very active at the taking of Cadiz, and for his good service was there knighted by the earl of Essex." Plates XII. and XIII.

This Philip, in 1611, was the first baronet of the family. The fifth baronet represented Norfolk in five parliaments, and the sixth was also the first peer, being created baron Wodehouse in 1797. His grandson is the present lord Wodehouse, educated like sir Philip Sidney at Christ Church, Oxford, and now representing her majesty queen Victoria as lord lieutenant of Ireland.

EMBLEM, p. 47.—"To Sir WILLIAM STANDLEY Knight."

The long renowned family of the Stanleys are descended from the ancient baronial family of Audley, and took their name from Stanleigh in Staffordshire, where they were sometime settled. The elder branch of the house has its direct representatives in the Stanleys of Great Storton and Hooton, Cheshire; and to a younger branch may be traced the Stanleys, earls of Derby, the Stanleys of Alderley park, Cheshire, and the Stanleys of Cumberland. Lysons'Cheshire, pp. 653, 367 and 481.

Sir Rowland Stanley of Storeton and Hooton, knt., who was sheriff of Cheshire in 1576, and who died April 5th 1613, in his ninety-sixth year, was the father of the sir William Stanley whom Whitney commemorates, and "lived to see his son's son's son settled at Hooton." Ormerod's Cheshire, vol ii. p. 229. Webb, p. 120.

In "Names and Arms of Knights made from 1485 to 1624" there are two sir William Stanleys, one knighted at Leith in the time of Henry VIII., and the other in the first year of Edward the Sixth's reign, but neither of these could be the sir William Stanley to whom Whitney offered two of his emblems; it is therefore uncertain where he obtained his knighthood, but "he was originally engaged in the service of the king of Spain," and afterwards in 1578 distinguished himself for his gallantry in reducing the rebellious province of Munster, and under either service may have received the honour. Heywood, however, says in 1579 "he was for his conduct knighted by Drury, at Waterford."

Under the earl of Leicester, who often mentions him in his letters, he was appointed to the command over the strong fortress of Deventer, very much to the discontent of the States General of Holland. This trust he betrayed in January 1587 into the hands of the Spaniards, and continued in their service for many years. He died March 6th 1630, being then governor of Mechlin or Malines for the Spanish king.

From Watson's History of Philip II. we may learn some of the particulars of this dark treachery, but it is a subject we need not pursue here; the whole is set forth in one of the Chetham Society's publications, so well edited by Thomas Heywood esq. of Ledbury; it is "Cardinal Allen's Defence of Sir William Stanley's Surrender of Deventer, January 29, 1586-7." Here, too, we have in the INTRODUCTION the best account extant of Stanley's life and character, with most of the circumstances attending his career, from his birth in 1534 to his death.

Allen's Defence appeared in the form of a letter which was hastily printed by Joachim Trognæsius at Antwerp in 1587. The antidote or reply bears the title, "A short admonition or warning vpon the detestable treason, wherewith sir William Standley, and Rowland Yorke haue betrayed and deliuered for monie, vnto the Spaniards, the towne of Deventer and the sconce of Zutphen." 4to. Licensed 1587.

His wife was Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of sir John Egerton of Egerton and Oulton knight, who died in 1590. Her monument, which was probably that of her husband also, was near the high altar of the church of Notre Dâme in Malines, and Thomas Heywood says, "the inscription is still to be seen." This last summer, 1865, I failed to find it there, and when I mentioned the circumstance to the librarian of the university of Louvain, M. Edm. Reusens D.D., he referred me to a book printed at Brussels in 1770, "Provincie, Stad, ende District van Mechelen," in which I found this inscription, very like the one given by Heywood: Introduction to Allen's Defence, p. xxxvii.

EMBLEM, p. 61.—Her Maiesties poësie, at the great Lotterie in LONDON. The badges and mottoes used by our sovereigns are of great variety. We will name only those of the Tudor race. Magazine, 1826, pt. ii. pp. 203-205; also 1819, pt. ii. pp. 130-131.

* The margin says: "Met 8 Schilden sonder Namen ofte Wapens," With 8 shields without names or arms.

Henry VIII., among other devices, used an archer drawing his arrow to the head, and also a flame of fire. Edward VI. chose a sun shining, and a phœnix on the funeral pile, with the scroll, "Nascatur ut alter," That another may be born, &c. Mary, when princess, preferred the white and red rose and a pomegranate knotted together; when queen, Time drawing Truth out of a pit, and the words as in Whitney, p. 4, "Veritas temporis filia," Truth the daughter of Time. Elizabeth's badges were "her mother's falcon, or rather dove, crown and sceptre; and her devices were very numerous, most commonly a sieve without a motto."

From the same authority we learn that Elizabeth made use of several heroic devices and mottoes; among the latter are "Semper eadem," Always the same; and "Video et taceo," I see and am silent.

"The great Lotterie in London," to which Whitney alludes, is regarded as the first held in England. The proposals for it were published in 1567-8, and it was intended to be drawn at the house of Mr. Derricke, the queen's jeweller, in Cheapside, but was actually drawn at the west door of St. Paul's cathedral. "The drawing began on the 11th of January 1569, and continued incessantly drawing, day and night, 'till the 6th of May following." There were forty thousand chances or tickets at ten shillings each, — the prizes being articles of plate and probably jewellery. The profits were devoted "towards the reparation of the Havens and strength of the realme, and towards such other public good workes."

A Virginian state lottery is named in 1567, and when the Great Yarmouth corporation were in want of funds for the works of their harbour, they endeavoured to replenish them by subscriptions to the visionary scheme. The whole town was "elevated to the enthusiasm of poetry," and various doggerel lines were attached to the tickets which were purchased; thus "THE GENTLEMEN'S POSY" was,

The LADIES' POSY was not quite so covetous; it read:

"A small stocke with good successe,
May shortly growe to good incresse."

Not daunted by failure the town again, in 1614, entrusted twenty-five pounds to the same lottery, and bemotto'd their adventure with some most pitiful rhymes, as — Blomfield, vol. v. p. 1601.

"Great Yarmouth haven, now in great distresse

EMBLEM, p. 65.—"To RICHARDE COTTON Esquier" of Combermere. "The Cottons of Cumbermere Abbey," we are informed, "are descended from the ancient family of Cotton of Cotton in Shropshire,* and settled in Cheshire in the reign of Henry VIII.; they are the representatives in the female line of the Calveleys, Tattenhalls, Harthills and other ancient Cheshire families." Lysons'Cheshire, p. 399.

Collateral branches of the same stock, or gens, settled also in Huntingdonshire, Cambridgeshire, Sussex and Gloucestershire; those of Gloucestershire being represented by the earl of Derby. At the latter end of the sixteenth century, in 1596, a worthy of the race, Roger Cotton, published "A Spirituall Song, containing an Historicall Discourse from the Infancie of the World untill this present Time," and also "An Armour of Proofe brought from the Tower of Dauid, to fight against the Spaniardes, and all the Enimies of the Trueth." Of another of the family, ROWLAND COTTON Miles, it is testified, "Incredible are the most true relations which many eye witnesses still alive do make of the valour and activity of this most accomplished knight; so strong, as if he had been nothing but bones; so nimble, as if he had been nothing but sinews." Lysons'Cheshire, p. 379. London, 4to. Fuller's Worthies, vol. iii. p. 82.

Sir Robert Bruce Cotton, of Cheshire descent, was born at Aikin's General Biography, vol. iii. p. 176.

* There were however Cottons in Cheshire as early as the reign of Henry III. (1216-72) and Edward III. (See Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii. p. 428; vol. iii. p. 372.)

Great Connington in Huntingdonshire, in 1570, and possessed estates also at Harley St. George, in Cambridgeshire. He was the founder of the celebrated collection of coins, manuscripts and books, now in the British museum, and known as the Cotton library. He died in 1631, almost from vexation and grief at being debarred from the free use of his literary treasures.

The sir George Cotton who was knighted "on Thursday the 19 day of Octobre Anno Dm. 1536," was the father of Richard Cotton named by Whitney, and received the grant of Combermere in the thirty-second year of Henry VIII.; and the uncle was the sir Richard Cotton,* one of the "Knightes of the carpett dubbed by the kinge (Edward the sixt) on tuesday the 22 day of ffebruary in the first year of his reigne." Richard Cotton, esq., the heir to Combermere, married for his first wife Mary the daughter of sir Arthur Mainwaring of Ightfield in Shropshire, whom Whitney commemorates; and the descendants of this marriage in a direct line have well sustained and increased the honours of their family. Robert, the great grandson of Richard and Mary Cotton, born in 1635, was created a baronet in 1677, and with the exception of one parliament represented the county from the thirty-first of Charles II. to the death of William III. Sir Thomas Cotton, his son, was sheriff in 1713, and sir Robert Salusbury Cotton of Combermere, his grandson, was elected to the first parliament of George II.; and from 1780 to 1790 another sir Robert Salusbury Cotton, bart., was also the knight in parliament for the county of Chester. In the peninsular war sir Stapleton Cotton gained great distinction, and was created lord Combermere in 1814, an honour which he held for fifty years, attaining the rank of field marshal in the British army and viscount Combermere. He died in this present year, 1865. His sister Sophia was the mother of the present sir H. Mainwaring, bart., of Peover.

The natural beauties of Combermere, and of the country around, Whitney celebrates with much tenderness and truth of feeling; they were those amidst which his youth was spent,

* This sir Richard Cotton was of Bedhampton in Hampshire and of Warblington in Sussex. He held under Edward VI. the offices of privy councillor and comptroller of the household; and in the first parliament of Philip and Mary was returned knight of the shire for Cheshire along with Richard Wilbraham of Woodhey, esq.

and time has by no means impaired them. The mansion is "a stately seate" —

> "With fishe, and foule, and cattaile sondrie flockes
> Where christall springes doe gushe out of the rockes."

One who knew the place in the generation which followed Whitney confirms to the full his testimony. "Upon the very Brow or Bank of the Mere is the Abby scituate, with the Park and all other parts for profit and pleasure surpassing, and environed on all sides to a large Extent, with such goodly Farms," "as that I know none for number and largenesse comparable to them in all these parts." "It is possessed by a branch of that renowned name of the Cottons, who have been of great accompt in many Shires, and of whom this Race hath now succeeded here unto the present owner thereof George Cotton Esquire,* a man of singular accompt for his wisdome, Integrity, gentlenesse, godlinesse, facility, and all generous dispositions." King's Vale Royal, pt. ii. p. 65. Plate XIV.

A more stately mansion occupies the site where the old abbey stood; and the historian of Cheshire thus describes its locality: "On the banks of a natural lake, in a rich and well-wooded country, undulating sufficiently for picturesque effect in the immediate vicinity of the abbey, and rising at a short distance into elevations which command noble and extended prospects over Cheshire, Shropshire and North Wales." What the abbey was in Whitney's time may be judged of from a vignette which was drawn at the beginning of last century, and which is reproduced in this fac-simile reprint. Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. iii. p. 211. Plate XIV.

EMBLEM, p. 66.— To JOHN PAYTON Esquier. Very little more than conjectures can be made with respect to this gentleman. Payton and Peyton appear interchangeable names. There were Peytons of Isleham, Cambridgeshire, baronets of the first creation in 1611; and a sir Edward Peyton, knighted in 1610, who married a daughter of sir James Calthorp, knight. Gent. Magazine, 1854, pt. i. p. 421. Betham's Baronetage, vol. i. p. 46.

An estate in Norfolk, of which sir Thomas Mildmay was owner in 1567, was conveyed by him in 1581 to Francis Gawdy, afterwards chief justice of the common pleas; from him it passed to sir Robert Rich, who conveyed it to sir John Peyton, in whose Blomfield's Norfolk, vol. iv. p. 212.

family it remained in 1620. This sir John Peyton, may be the same with John Payton, esq., and against whom and the bishop of Ely in 1579 a memorial to the council was presented that they might be required to attend to the river of Wisbeach.

EMBLEM, p. 67.—To MILES HOBART, Esquier. The writers in the Gentleman's Magazine have settled who the sir Miles Hobart was, the patriot member for Great Marlow, who died 29th June 1632; but do not appear to recognise the MILES HOBART, Esquier, whom Whitney honours, and who must have been a man of repute in 1586.

1849, pt. i. pp. 372 and 373; 1851, pt. ii. pp. 227-234 and 377-383.

From the authorities quoted it appears the Hobarts were settled at Leyham in Norfolk A.D. 1488. James, the second son, became attorney-general to Henry VII., and died in 1525. "From him are descended the Hobarts of Blickling, represented by the earls of Buckinghamshire, those of Plumstead and those of Intwood." William, the eldest brother of the attorney-general James, inherited Leyham, and among his descendants are Miles Hobart of London, the father of sir Miles Hobart, knight, the renowned member for Great Marlow. As far as the time is concerned the former of these may have been our Miles Hobart, esq.

But the name was "already common in the more distinguished or legal branch of the family," and among them probably is to be identified Whitney's Miles Hobart.

EMBLEM, p. 68.—To THO. STVTVILE ESQUIER. With the enviable liberty of former times the name is written Stutteville, Stutevyle and Stutevil. It belonged to a Suffolk family, and had among its members a Roger in 1240, a sir Nicholas in 1291, a Robert in 1310, a John and a Richard in 1414, a William in 1495, and a Charles in 1574. A sir Martin Stutevile appears to have reigned over the manor of Kimberley from 1600 to 1644. There is room to insert Thomas between Charles in 1574 and Martin in 1600.

Blomfield's Norfolk, vols. i. iv. and v.

EMBLEM, p. 69.—To GEORGE BROOKE Esquier. The writers of the Athenæ Cantabrigienses make this George Brooke to have been the fourth and youngest son of William Brooke lord Cobham, K.G., and to have been "born at Cobham in Kent 17th

Vol. ii. pp. 359 and 360.

April 1568." When only twelve years of age "he was matriculated as a fellow-commoner of King's college in May 1580, and created M.A. 1586." He was mixed up with the supposed plot of sir Walter Raleigh, Henry lord Cobham &c., against James I. and his children, and was beheaded at Winchester December 5th 1603. A sir William Brooke, knight of the honourable Order of the Bath, was son to this George Brooke.

Betham's Baronetage, vol. ii. p. 125.

Camden mentions a sir Robert Brooke, of Suffolk, who was lord chief justice of common pleas in 1554 and died in 1558, and George Brooke may have been of his family.

The Whitneys and the Brookes of Cheshire intermarried. Geffrey Whitney's brother was named Brooke, and we may therefore consider if it is not from Cheshire rather than from Kent that the patron of this emblem is to be sought, especially as lord Cobham's youngest son was only eighteen years of age when the Choice of Emblemes was published.

Adam, lord of Leighton, near Nantwich, in the reign of king John, was the common ancestor of the Brookes of Cheshire. His son took the name William DE LA BROOKE of Leighton, 33 Henry III.; for "under the said Manour-House in Leighton a Brook runneth,* from whence their Posterity assumed the Sirname del Brook."

Sir P. Leycester's Historical Antiquities, p. 326.

The elder branch, the Brookes of Leighton, became extinct in the male line in or about the reign of queen Elizabeth; a younger branch settled at Norton in Cheshire, having purchased lands there from the king, 37 Henry VIII. An. Dom. 1545; and from this younger branch are descended the present Brookes of Norton and those of Mere.

The Lysons, p. 363.

Richard Brook of Norton, the king's feoffee in 1545, was sheriff of Cheshire in 1563, and died in 1569; his son Thomas was twice sheriff, 1578 and 1592, and had a son George who was drowned in Warrington water. From relationship and from being of the same age and county this George Brook has some claim to be regarded as the person intended by Whitney. It is however only conjecture.

Sir P. Leycester and Ormerod, vol. i. p. 501.

* Were it not for this express testimony we should derive the name from the old word, Brock, a badger, especially as a badger was and is the crest of the family. Brocklebank, Brocklehurst, &c., are also names of the same origin.

EMBLEM, p. 71.—To BARTHRAM CALTHORPE Esquier. The Calthorpes are a family of old standing in Norfolk, for in 1241 one of them, sir William de Calthorpe, aided in founding a monastery of Whitefriars. Among "the knightes of the carpett dubbed by the kinge on tuesday the 22 day of ffebruary" 1547-8 is "sir Philippe Calthorpe;" and in the reign of queen Elizabeth 1566, "sir Will^m^ Calthorpe." Barthram Calthorpe would probably be of this family, and brother to Charles Calthorpe whom Whitney afterwards mentions, and in connection with whom some other observations on the Calthorpes will be made.

EMBLEM, p. 72.—To the very accomplished youths nine brothers the sons of GEORGE BVRGOINE Esquier. That nine brothers should leave no impress as nine upon the history of their age is rather surprising, but as yet they have not been identified. The name has belonged to the county of Bedford for several centuries. There is a tradition, not indeed to be implicitly believed, that the township of Sutton in Bedfordshire was bestowed on Roger Burgoyne by John of Gaunt, "time honour'd Lancaster," in terms as follow:

Tymm'sCamden, vol. iii. p. 21.

"I, John of Gaunt,
Do give and do graunt
Unto Roger Burgoyne
And the heirs of his loyne
Both Sutton and Potton
Until the world's rotten."

A Robert Burgoyne of Sutton, and of Wroxall in Warwickshire, was high sheriff of the county of Warwick 39 Elizabeth, An. Dom. 1597. There have been ten baronets of Sutton park, of whom the first was erected in 1641.

EMBLEM, pp. 86, 87.—To the Reverend man Mr. ALEXANDER NOWELL, Dean of Saint Paul's Church, London, famous for learning and for character. The first of the devices here assigned to Dr. Nowell was originally, as Whitney intimates, the standard which in view of death the renowned Saladin ordered to be borne throughout his army:

"With trumpet Sounde, and Heralte to declare,
Theise wordes alowde: The Kinge of all the Easte
Great SALADINE, behoulde is stripped bare:
Of kingdomes large, and lyes in house of claie,
And this is all, he bare with him awaie."

In Symbols divine and human of Pontiffs, Emperors and Kings this device is figured, as in Whitney, and named, "The Simple Hierograph of Mahometans." It is headed by the lines Vol. i. p. 58.

"Saladin Sultan Ottoman of the Turks Emperor, — of Babylon, Damascus, Egypt King."

A scroll bears the words, "Restat ex Victore Orientis," What remains of the conqueror of the east. The explanation is added:

"Of Saladin, who destroyed our kingdom of Jerusalem, thou seest the equipment, even his banner or standard. For as he was dying he ordered to be proclaimed around, 'Let no one who worthily may stand up in our place, or who may rise in our Commonwealth, grow proud from the prosperity of his affairs.'"

A work of great research and authority worthily sets forth the biography and labours of this very excellent dean of St. Paul's. It is "THE LIFE OF ALEXANDER NOWELL," "chiefly compiled from Registers, Letters, and other authentic Evidences. By Ralph Churton, M.A." 8vo, Oxford, 1809. We cannot pretend to abridge it, and they who would fully appreciate what a man of worth and learning Nowell was must have recourse to Churton's volume.

Some few gleanings from other sources may be allowed; and first from old kind-hearted Isaak Walton, who as a fisherman himself had a deep sympathy with Dr. Nowell. He speaks of him as "the good old man (though he was very learned, yet knowing that God leads us not to heaven by many nor by hard questions), like an honest angler, made that good, plain, unperplexed catechism which is printed with our good old Service Book." The Complete Angler.

Next we have the matchless Fuller to be our interpreter, and he tells us, "ALEXANDER NOWELL was born 1510 of a knightly family at Read," in the county of Lancaster, "and at thirteen years of age being admitted into Brazen-nose College in Oxford, studied thirteen years therein. Then he became schoolmaster Worthies of England, vol. ii. pp. 204 and 205.

of Westminster. It happened in the first of queen Mary* he was fishing upon the Thames, an exercise wherein he much delighted, insomuch that his picture kept in Brazen-nose College is drawn with his lines, hooks and other tackling, lying in a round on one hand, and his angles of several sorts on the other. But, whilst Nowell was catching of fishes, Bonner was catching of Nowell; and understanding who he was, designed him to the shambles, whither he had certainly been sent, had not Mr. Francis Bowyer, then Merchant, afterwards sheriff of London, safely conveyed him beyond seas."

"Without offence it may be remembered, that leaving a bottle of ale, when fishing, in the grass, he found it some days after, no bottle, but a gun, such the sound at the opening thereof: and this is believed (casualty is mother of more inventions than industry) the original of bottled ale in England."

"Returning the first year of queen Elizabeth, he was made dean of St. Paul's; and for his meek spirit, deep learning, prudence and piety, the then parliament and convocation both chose enjoined and trusted him to be the man to make a catechism for public use, such a one as should stand as a rule for faith and manners to their posterity."

"He was confessor to queen Elizabeth, constantly preaching the first and last Lent sermons before her. He gave two hundred pounds per annum to maintain thirteen scholars in Brazen-nose College. He died, being ninety years of age, not decayed in sight, February 13, 1601."

There appear to have been three catechisms which owe their origin to his labour and countenance; first, the catechism in the Book of Common Prayer; second, "A Catechisme or Institution of Christian Religion to bee learn'd of all youth next after the little Catechisme appointed in the booke of common Prayer,"

Vol. ii. p. 391.

* Bishop Burnet testifies that Nowell was elected to serve in the first parliament under queen Mary in 1553. On the second day of the session there was a debate, "whether he, being a prebendary of Westminster, could sit in the House? and the committee being appointed to search for precedents, it was reported, that he, being represented in the convocation house, could not be a member of that House, so he was cast out." The portrait, as described by Fuller, still exists at Brazen-nose. The engraving in Churton's Life of Nowell bears the inscription "Alexander Nowell D.D. Dean of St. Paul's Ob. Feb. 1601/2 An Æt 95 Piscator Hominum."

London, "with the grace and privilege of the queen's majesty, Anno 1572;" and third, "ΚΑΤΗΧΙΣΜΟΣ, ἡ πρώτη παιδέυσις τῆς χριστιανῶν εισεβείας, τῇ Ελλήνων, καὶ τῃ Ρωμαίων διαλεκτῳ εκδοθείσα. Catechismus Græce et Latine explicata." London, An. Dom. 1573. This catechism was translated into Greek by William Whittaker,* and dedicated to sir William Cecil. The catechism in Latin was written some years before it was printed, as appears from the Calendar of State Papers, 1547-1580; "June 16, 1570. Alexander Nowell, dean of St. Paul's, to sir W^m^ Cecil. The Latin catechism which he wrote about seven years since, and dedicated to him, is now at lengthe printed, by Appointment of the Archbishops of Canterbury and York." Domestic Series, p. 382.

Dr. William Cleaver, bishop of Chester from 1788 to 1799, republished, with notes, dean Nowell's "Prima Institutio Disciplinæque Pietatis Christianæ," and appointed to be used in his diocese by candidates in theology.

There is an engraving of Dr. Nowell in Holland's Horoölogia; and an excellent account of him in Bliss's edition of Wood's Athenæ Oxonienses. See also Chalmer's Gen. Biog. Dict. vol. xxiii. pp. 224-265. Vol. i. pp. 715-719.

EMBLEM, p. 93.—To my sister M. D. Colley. Generally in the biographical notices I have passed over the several members of the Whitney family, because they are treated of in the Introductory Dissertation. This name Colley however is suggestive of the fact that in Elizabeth's reign it was borne by the ancestors of the now world-wide celebrated Wellesley family. Sir Henry Colley was knighted in 1560, and his second son, also sir Henry, in 1576. "Cowley (or Colley as it has been more generally spelt) is well known to have been the original name of the family of Wellesley or Wesley. The latter name was assumed by the first lord Mornington." These Colleys were of English origin, at one time possessing "large property in Rutland." In Betham's Baronetage are named a Roger Colley and a Thomas Colley. Chap. II., Sect. II. p. xxxv. Gent. Magazine, 1822, pt. ii. p. 325; 1828, pt. i. p. 5. Gent. Magazine, 1822, pt. ii. p. 607. pt. iii. p. 19; pt. iv. p. 14.

* His father married a sister of dean Nowell's, and from that stock, through William's elder brother Robert, descended doctor Whitaker the historian, and from 1809 until his death in 1821 vicar of Whalley in Lancashire. Of William Whitaker, who died in 1595, bishop Hull said: "Never a man saw him without reverence, or heard him without wonder." Churton's Life of Nowell; and Gent. Magazine, 1810, pt. i. pp. 25 and 215.

Gent. Magazine, 1822, pt. ii. p. 416.

The earliest notice in Ormerod of Cheshire Colleys is in the time of Charles II., when the township of Church-en-Heath, or Churton, "was purchased by Mr. Colley, a nonconformist minister, ancestor of Mr. Colley, the present proprietor of this little township, which contains only 120 statute acres, forming one farm."

See also The Lysons, p. 620.

It is however known that the Colleys were settled at Eccleston, near Chester, in the time of the civil war, and that of this family Whitney's sister was a member. Dr. Davies, a physician, now of the Whitefriars, Chester, is descended from M. D. Colley, and possesses a "safe conduct," granted December 1, 1643, to his ancestor, Mr. William Colley of Eccleston, by Arthur lord Capel, in which the "Lieutenant Generall of the fforces" charges all under his command "not to doe nor willingly permit or suffer to bee done any hurt, vyolence, damage, plunder, or detriment whatsoever unto the person, house, family, goods, chattels or estate of William Colley, of Eccleston in the Countie of Cheshire, gentleman." There were too Colleys of Audlem, for in the register of Acton church, the parish church of the Whitneys, under the date 1659, is the entry, "Thomas Colley of Audlem and Elizabeth Harrison of Poole were married 18th July," and 1662, "Samuell Colley & Maria Venables Septr 15."

Journal of the Arch. &c. Society of Chester, vol. ii. pp. 273 and 309.

EMBLEM, p. 95. — "De Inuido et Auaro, iocosum," Of the envious and the greedy: a tale. This tale, as Whitney states in his margin, is from the epistles, i.e. "The Golden Epistles" of Guevara. Antony De Guevara was a Spaniard, bishop of Guadix in Granada, and known as the historiographer of the emperor Charles V., and for his "Dial of Princes, or the Life of M. A. Antonius." He was the author of several other works; among which are "The Golden Epistles," of which there was a translation into Italian — "Delle Lettere Dell' illre Signore Don Antonio Di Guevara, &c. Nuouamente tradotto dal S. Alfonso Ulloa. In Venetia, M.D.LXXV. Appresse gli Heredi di Vincenzo Valgrisi," 4to, — in four books or volumes, containing respectively 230, 270, 181 and 187 pages. Guevara died in 1544.

EMBLEM, p. 96. — To the very accomplished Mr. PETER WITHIPOLE. The Coopers supply the following notice: "PETER

Athenæ Cantab. vol. ii. p. 13.

WITHYPOLL, son of a person residing at Ipswich, was educated in Trinity hall, where he was admitted a fellow 1st June 1572, proceeding LL.B. 1579. He was commissary of the bishop of Norwich for the archdeaconry of Suffolk 1580, and vacated his fellowship at Trinity hall on or shortly before 25th February 1582-3, and his commissaryship in 1586." Blomefield mentions "Sir William Wythypole of Christ Church in Ipswich in Suffolk descended from Robert Wythypole of Wythypole in Shropshire."

Norfolk, vol. iii. p. 458; also vol. i. p. 178.

Hadrian Junius by no means gives so complete a play upon the words as Whitney does, but very tamely says, "Petram imitare iuuentus," Youth imitate the rock, and thus addresses his son Peter: "En tibi quas, fili, genituræ consecro testes Ceras, aucturas nomina amicitiæ," "Behold what tablets as witnesses of thy natal hour I consecrate to thee, my son, which shall increase the renown of friendship." The stanzas of Junius may here be compared with those of Whitney:

Had. Ivnii Emblemata, lix.

> "Sperne voluptates, iuuenis, constanter; vt iras
> Ventorum, assultúsque maris Marpesiæ cautes.
> Nate, tuo lepidè ludens in nomine, dictas
> Symbolico elogio, tu, Petram imitare Iuuentus."

EMBLEM, p. 97.—To his old friend Mr. GEORGE SALMON, who escaped from Rome at the great peril of life. As a Cheshire name Salmon boasts a considerable antiquity and a curious origin. It is the name of a Norman proprietor, Robert Salmon, who "remitted and quit-claimed" to Randle Blundeville, earl of Chester (anno 1181-1232) "all the lands which his father held in Normandy," and received in exchange the township of Lower Withington, near Macclesfield, and in addition "xx^{s} rent out of the mills of Macclesfield."* Robert's daughter Mary was married to Roger de Davenport.

Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. iii. p. 356.

* Ormerod adds in a note: "There is no regular descent of the SALMONS in the Cheshire collections, but their name occurs from a very early period among the marriages given in pedigrees of the families in the neighbourhood of Nantwich, and many respectable branches are yet in existence which, in all probability, derive their origin from this source." The Lysons name Mrs. Dighton Salmon, Messrs. Salmon, Margaret Salmon, the Rev. Richard Lowndes Salmon, &c.; and an obituary, "George Salmon Esq. of Nantwich, formerly Governor of Fort Marlborough in the East Indies."

Gent. Magazine, 1848, pt. ii. p. 554.

British Museum MS. 1424, Plut. lvi. 1.

The Visitation of Cheshire, 1580, names a William Salmon among the freeholders in Nantwich hundred; and the occurrence of the name renders it probable that Whitney's old friend was from the same neighbourhood with himself. He was probably rector of Baddiley, near Nantwich, for on the list of rectors for that parish occurs the entry: "1605, 13 Ap. George Salmon," the patron, "Edmund Mainwaring."

Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. iii. p. 243.

In queen Mary's reign, on the accession of a new pope in 1555, the populace in Rome broke open the prisons of the inquisition, and set free the prisoners. Among the captives thus liberated were sir Thomas Wilson and Craig the Scottish reformer, who protested against the marriage of Mary and Bothwell in 1567. Might it not be that on occasion of the above named tumult George Salmon also escaped from Rome at the extreme peril of his life?

His widow Cecily died full of days 15th July 1599. The bishop left three children, John, archdeacon of Norwich, born about 1545; Edmund, noticed here by Whitney; and "Martha, wife of Nathaniel Cole, sometime senior fellow of Trinity college." There were persons of the same name "of good repute in Somersetshire." Ralph Freake, esq., "was for many years auditor of the treasury in the reigns of King Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth, and died worth upwards of one hundred thousand pounds." His first son, sir Thomas Freake, was ancestor of the Freakes of Dorsetshire, and his second son, William, of the Freakes of Hampshire. Blomefield's Norfolk, vol. iv. p. 482.

There were Alcocks of Cheshire and of Yorkshire, but I have not been fortunate enough to identify the very learned youth Anthony Alcock.

EMBLEM, p. 101.—To the accomplished Mr. ELLIS GRYPHITH. A name to be left undetermined. Were it allowed, from the transmission or repetition of the prænomen Ellis, to conclude that the Gryphith mentioned was of the same family as that which once bore both the names, we might decide to what stock this Ellis Gryphith should be assigned. We should then say that he was a Cheshire man of a Welsh origin, probably the Matthew Ellis, or Ellis Gryphith, of Overlegh, near Chester, gentleman, who died 31st July 1613. He was grandson to Matthew Ellis, one of the gentlemen of the body guard to king Henry VIII., the son of Ellis ap Dio, ap Griffith, lineally descended from Tudor Trevor earl of Hereford. Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. i. p. 268. See also The Lysons, pp. 628, 696 and 370.

EMBLEM, p. 103.—To Mr. PETER COLVIUS, of Bruges. Several learned men of Holland and the Netherlands have borne the name of Colvius, as Andrew Colvius, born at Dordrecht in 1549. Peter Colvius, whom Whitney addresses, was born at Bruges in 1567, and killed by a blow from a mule at Paris in 1594. His untimely fate was much lamented, and Dousa deplored it in an epitaph of considerable elegance, beginning with Biog. Universelle, vol. ix. Hofman Peerlkamp's Liber, 1838, pp. 159-161.

> "Colvius hic situs est, Flandris generatus Athenis, > Illecebris pessum quem dedit aula suis,"
> "Colvius here lies buried, born in the Athens of Flanders, > Whom by its allurements the court gave to perdition;"

but ending with a punning allusion both to his editing the Golden Ass of Apuleius and to the manner of his death:

"I nunc Luci Asino nativum redde nitorem, Nata asino rumpat ut tibi mula caput,"

"Go now to Lucius Asinus the native splendor restore,
As a mule born from an Ass broke in pieces thy head."

For one so young he distinguished himself among the scholars of the sixteenth century. We owe to him, at Leyden in 1588, "Ex officina Plantiniana Apud Franciscum Raphelengium," an edition of all the works of APULEIUS, of Madaura, in Africa; an 8vo volume of 431 pages. He added to it from the same press and in the same year abundant notes, occupying 294 pages, to which are appended 38 elegiac verses by Janus Dousa the younger. Oudendorp and Ruhnken reprinted these notes at Leyden in 1786. The learned notes on Sidonius Apollinaris, published at Paris in 1598, were also written by Colvius. Of his Latin poetry, which he cultivated with some success, besides the ode to Whitney, there are specimens in the Delitiae C. Poetarvm Belgicorvm: but the choice of words is occasionally incorrect. Jöcher says he passed the year 1591 as a common soldier at the siege of Rouen, and was killed in his twenty-seventh year at Paris.

LOOKED together as are the two parts of Whitney's Emblems in one continuous volume, no real necessity for separating them exists, but it is of some advantage to have a break in a long series of notes, and therefore we follow the division which the author himself adopted. There is no essential difference between the first and second parts, except it be that more references are made in the latter to the celebrated men of classical antiquity.

EMBLEM, p. 106. — "In Praise of the two noble Earles, WARWICKE and LEYCESTER." The badge of both earls is the bear and ragged staff, and therefore the allusion which Whitney makes to "TWO Beares, — the greater, and the lesse" is appropriate to

> "Two noble peeres, who both doe giue the beare,
> Two famous Earles, whose praises pierce the skye."

We have already given a sketch of the life and character of one of the brothers, Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, and rejoice that a much brighter picture may be given of his elder brother, Ambrose Dudley, earl of Warwick. The chivalry, the courtesy, the honour and the love of literature which distinguished the Sidneys, father and son, sir Henry and sir Philip, also eminently belonged to him. The respective qualities of the two brothers are very quaintly but very forcibly and truly drawn by our old friend Thomas Fuller: "John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, left two sons who succeeded to great honour; Ambrose earl of Warwick, heir to all that was good, and Robert earl of Leycester, heir to all that was great in their father."

See Page 315.

Worthies, vol. iii. p. 134.

There is so excellent a memoir of the "good earl" by the Coopers of Cambridge, that were their work as widely known and as accessible as it deserves to be, we should simply refer to its pages; but a brief account is required here. Ambrose was the fourth son, born about the year 1530, and knighted in 1549.

Ath. Cantab. vol. ii pp. 66-70.

He maintained a high place in king Edward's regards, but with the fortunes of his father and brother his own declined at the beginning of Mary's reign; in 1557 however he accompanied king Philip into Picardy, and in consideration of his faithful services his family was restored in blood. On Elizabeth's accession he early became one of the most distinguished at her court, and was created first baron L'Isle and then earl of Warwick, in 1562. The queen having determined to assist the Huguenots, Ambrose Dudley led the English forces, and received a severe and life-long troublesome wound at the siege of New-haven, or as now named Havre de Grace. He filled many high offices, and had many honours conferred upon him, but never joined in the intrigues of this busy reign. One historian says of him, "he was a man of great sweetness of temper and of unexceptionable character, so that he was beloved by all parties and hated by none."

Chalmers's Gen. Biogr. vol. xii. p. 405.

The wound which he had received in 1562 occasioned him at times great pain and inconvenience, and he died from the effects of amputation February 21st 1589-90, and a splendid tomb was erected over him in Our Lady's chapel at Warwick. He was married three times, but left no child. His portrait and the portraits of his father and of his brother Robert are at Knole, near Sevenoaks, Kent; his portrait is also at Woburn abbey and Hatfield house.* Many of his original letters exist, and sir Henry Ellis gives one, entitled, "Ambrose Earle of Warwick's Experience of Archers, penned with his owne hand."

For particulars respecting him Bliss's edition of Athenæ Oxonienses may be consulted, and Fasti Oxonienses, 1566; also Chalmers's General Biography, London, 1813, vol. xii. p. 405.

EMBLEM, p. 115.—Fortiter et feliciter. This device, which Whitney assigns to the Roman Marcus Sergius, properly belongs to the dukes of Milan. With the motto, "ESTE DUCES," Be ye leaders, it was borne by John Galeas Sforza, who in some accounts is named the sixth duke.†

loss of one, the advantage of another. The George Sabine, to whom Whitney refers, was a Latin poet and man of learning in the sixteenth century. His principal poems are "Res Gestæ Cæsarum Romanorum," Exploits of the Roman emperors. He was born in Brandenburg in 1508, and died in Italy in 1560. His wife was Melancthon's eldest daughter.

EMBLEM, p. 120.—To the very reverend Dr. WILLIAM CHATTERTON Bishop of Chester. In reference to the device here given it may be mentioned that John Alcock, bishop of Ely, rejoicing probably in his name, published in 1498 a work in 4to, which bears the whimsical and punning title, "Galli Cantus Johannis Alcock episcopi Eliensis ad fratros suos," The crowing of the cock to his brethren. At the beginning is a print of the bishop preaching to his clergy, with a cock on each side; there is also a cock on the first page.*

In modern times there has been written an "Alectrophonia Ecclesiastica," or "The weathercock's Homily from the Church Steeple," but not to be compared to Whitney's, either for force of expression or for the quaint beauty of the sentiments. The opening lines however have considerable excellence: Gent. Magazine, 1842, pt. ii. p. 272.

"The mimic Cock, that crests yon hallow'd spire,
What means he? well the churchman may inquire.
Deem not our pious ancestors would dare
Exalt a bauble on the House of Prayer!
If right we listen to the mystic bird,
'WAKE TO REPENTANCE,' is his watch-note heard,
'Repent!' within those walls the preacher cries;
'Repent!' the shrill-voic'd herald still replies,—
Perch'd high, and seen afar, that all may view
How free the general call, and hear it too."

Bishop Chatterton's name is usually written Chaderton, but the Cheshire historians scarcely touch on the origin of his family, which must be learned from other sources. Fuller supplies a brief notice: "William Chaderton, D.D. Here I solemnly Worthies, vol. i p. 269.

* The Italian emblematist Lodovico Dominichi adopted a watchdog, rather than the cock, as the symbol of vigilance and guardianship over the churches of Christ, and gave the motto "Non dormit qvi cvstodit," which will be mentioned again in the Addenda. Ragionamento, pp. 133 and 134, Venice, 1556.

tender deserved thanks to my manuscript author, charitably guiding me in the dark, assuring that this doctor was 'ex præclaro Chadertonorum Cestrensis comitatûs stemmate prognatus' (descended from the famous stem of Chadertons of the county of Chester). And although this doubtful direction doth not cleave the pen, it doth not hit the white; so that his nativity may with most probability (not prejudicing the right of Lancashire when produced) here be fixed. He was bred first fellow, then master of Queen's, and never of Magdalen College in Cambridge (as the Reverend Bishop Godwin mistaketh), and chosen first the Lady Margaret's, then the King's professor in divinity; and doctor Whitacre succeeded him immediately in his chair. He was, anno 1579, made bishop of Chester, then of Lincoln 1594; demeaning himself in both to his great commendation. He departed this life in April 1608."

An authority in every way competent, the Rev. F. R. Raines, of Milnrow parsonage, Rochdale, decides against Fuller's "manuscript author," thus: "There is little if any doubt that William Chaderton, Bishop of Lincoln, and Lawrence Chaderton, Master of Emanuel college, Cambridge, were of one family." "In 1605 there were only two families of heraldic rank of this name in Lancashire, represented by George Chaderton of Lees in Oldham, and Edmund Chaderton of Nuthurst in Manchester, the former the brother of Dr. Lawrence Chaderton and the latter the great-nephew of the Bishop of Lincoln. The precise degree of relationship between Dr. Lawrence Chaderton and the Bishop has not been discovered; but they are presumed to have been descended, one in the third and the other in the fourth degree, from the two sons of Edmund Chaderton of the Lees, living there in 1428, the Bishop being of the younger branch."

Gent. Magazine, 1854, pt.ii. p.588.

The pedigree of bishop Chaderton's branch generally agrees with sir Peter Leycester's statement that "he had onely one Daughter and Heir, called Joñe, the first Wife of Sir Richard Brooke of Norton in Cheshire;" and that their only daughter and heiress Mary, or Elizabeth, for this is uncertain, was married to Torrell Jocelyne esq., of Essex or Cambridgeshire, of which marriage also the only issue was a daughter Theodora.

Notes and Queries, vol. vi. p. 273.
Historical Antiquities, p. 187.
Betham's Baronetage; vol. ii. p. 335.

To this Theodora was addressed that beautiful little book, beautiful for its spirit of deep love and devotion, "The Mother's Legacy to her Unborn Child." With a sad presentiment it had been written; the daughter was born October 12th 1622, and the mother having thanked God that she had lived to see her child a Christian, in a few days, as the appendix to the work recites, "ended her Prayers, Speech and Life together, rendring her Soul into the Hand of her Redeemer." Mother's Legacy, Appendix, p. 19.

The bishop was a man of earnest mind and had a leaning towards puritanism in religion; to him Whitney's lines were very appropriate, for he was "arm'de with learning, and with life." During his abode in Cambridge he and Dr. Andrews, afterwards bishop of Ely, and Mr. Knewstubb, to whom Whitney devotes an emblem, and others united in the observance of weekly meetings for conference upon Scripture; and thus by nearly two centuries anticipated the small association of students formed by Charles Wesley in Oxford for setting apart Sunday evenings to the reading of divinity.* Emb. p. 223.

King's Vale Royal gives two instances of the bishop's wit or humour, of which one brought on him a severe rebuke. "This Doctor, while at Cambridge preacht a Wedding-Sermon, and used therein this merry Comparison: The choice of a Wife (said he) is full of hazard, not unlike to a man groping for one Fish in a barrel full of Serpents: if he scape harm of the Snakes, and light on the Fish, he may be thought fortunate, yet let him not boast, for perhaps it may be but an Eele." Chronicon Cestrense, p. 44.

Again, it is recorded: "He preached the Funeral Sermon of Henry Stanley, Earl of Derby, at Orms-Church in Lancashire, An. 1593; wherein having given large commendations of the deceased person, turned his Speech to Ferdinando the then present Earl. You (said he) noble Earl, that not onely inherit, but exceed your Father's virtues, learn to keep the love of your Countrey, as your Father did. You give in your Arms three Legs,† signi-

* From information furnished by the Rev. R. Brook Aspland.

† Arms very similar to those of the lords of Man were borne by the Signor Count Battista da Lodrone, who died at the taking of Casale in Monferrato. Lodovico Domenichi says that his special device was a caltrop, or tribulus, a ball armed with three projecting points of iron, one of which remains upright however the ball be thrown; the motto is, In utraque fortuna, Good luck on every side. So the motto to the Legs of Man, Quocunque jacebis, stabit, Whichever way you cast, it will stand, has the like meaning. Ragionamento, Venice, 1556, p. 95.

fying three Shires, Cheshire, Derbyshire, and Lancashire: stand fast on these three Legs, and you shall need fear none of their Arms. At which, the Earl somewhat moved, said in a heat, and sinfully sealed it with an Oath, This Priest, I believe, hopes one day, to make him three Courtesies;" i.e. three bendings of the knees on being appointed by the queen to higher dignities.

Vol. ii. pp. 482 and 483.

A more connected view of bishop Chaderton's life and character may be gathered from the Athenæ Cantabrigienses, where a list of his works is given, and his portrait and arms noticed. A considerable number of his letters are contained in Peck's Desiderata Curiosa.

In 1568 William Chaderton was appointed chaplain to the earl of Leicester, and there is a curious letter from the earl to his chaplain when the latter requested advice as to his own marriage. Baines's History of Lancashire may be consulted for many particulars respecting him.

EMBLEM, pp. 121, 122.—To the very honourable FRANCIS WINDHAM, and EDWARD FLOWERDEWE, most upright judges.

Foss's Judges of England, vol. v. pp. 407, 409 and 421.

In 1579 Francis Windham was appointed one of the justices of the common pleas, and Edward Flowerdewe in 1584 one of the barons of the exchequer.

Betham's Baronetage, vol. i. p. 16.

Sir Francis Windham, knt., married Jane, one of the daughters of sir Nicholas Bacon, lord keeper of the great seal in Elizabeth's reign, and thus was closely allied to the great philosophical writer, Francis Bacon, viscount St. Albans. The name has its origin, like so many others, from the possessions and residence of the family, whose estates were principally in Norfolk, and who in later times have been associated chiefly with Felbrigge, a portion of their property. The township name or the parish name and the family name were one, though variously written, as Winmuntham, Wimundhan, Wimondham, and Windham or Wyndham. In 1466 John Windham, the father, settled the manor of Banningham on John his son and Margaret, daughter of sir John Howard, knt., and their issue, from which time it has passed with Felbrigge.

Palmer's Manship's Yarmouth gives some account of Francis Wyndham; but a much more complete biography is to be found in the Athenæ Cantabrigienses, from which it appears that he was the second son of sir Edmund Wyndham, of Felbrigg in Norfolk, represented his native county in parliament in 1572, and after filling several offices of importance, died at Norwich in July 1592.

Edward Flowerdewe succeeded to J. Clench as third baron of the exchequer October 23rd, 1584. He was one of the sons of John Flowerdew, esq., a large landed proprietor of Hethersett in Norfolk, entered at Cambridge without taking a degree, and was admitted a member of the Inner Temple October 11th 1552, and was very successful in his profession. His reputation as a lawyer is attested, as was that of lord keeper Egerton, by several annuities which his grateful clients, as Thomas Grimesdiche, Simon Harecourt, and sir Thomas Gresham, granted to him by way of rent charge on their estates "for his good and faithful counsel and advice." From Flowerdewe's friendship for Whitney we may mention that he was counsel to the town of Great Yarmouth in 1573, was chosen to settle their disputes with the Cinque Ports May 1575, and appointed under-steward in 1580. In the list of the pic-nic party which visited Scratby island Aug. 2nd 1580 he is named by Whitney, "Edm^{d} Flowerdewe esq^{r} Sergeant at law." At one time Whitney appears to have acted as Flowerdewe's deputy. Foss records that Flowerdewe was a correspondent of Lady Amye Dudley, the Amy Robsart of Scott's Kenilworth.

Baron Flowerdewe's death was occasioned by the fearfully unhealthy state of Exeter gaol. A letter from Walsyngham to Leicester, 11th April 1586, testifies: "Sir Ant. Basset and Sir Jhon Chichester, and three justices more in Devonshire, are dead thorrowghe the infectyon of the gaole. Baron Flowerdewe, one of the justyces of that cyrcute, is also dead. The takyng awaye of well affected men in this corrupt tyme sheweth that God is angrye with us." See also Holinshed's Chronicle, vol. iv. p. 868.

These gatherings by the wayside may be supplemented from the ampler and better arranged stores of the Athenæ Cantabrigienses, or of Palmer's edition of Manship's History of Great Yarmouth, where a short life of the judge is given.

EMBLEM, p. 126.—To the very noble and learned JAN DOUSA LORD OF NOORTWIICK.

The poet's badge derives its origin from Egyptian times, when

Plate II.

"an old man musical" was denoted by the bird fabled to sing the sweetest when power to sing is nearly over.* Through the whole course of Greek and Roman literature we find comparisons and illustrations taken from the supposed qualities of the swan, as in Æschylus and Antipater of Sidon; in Virgil, Æn. vii. 700; Horace, Carm. iv. 2, 25; and Ovid, Met. xiv. 430; but we will give only one instance in full, lest the lines should be applied, Agamemnon, vv. 1322, 1444. Anth. Gk. 76.

> "Swans sing before they die; 'twere no bad thing,
> Did certain persons die before they sing."

Plato's Works, Francofurti, 1602, p. 64A.

We refer to the conversation of Socrates as recorded by Plato. His friends were fearful of causing him trouble and vexation, but he reminds them that they should not think him inferior in foresight to the swans, for these "fall a singing as soon as they perceive that they are about to die, and sing far more sweetly than at any former time, being glad that they are about to go away to the God whose servants they are."

Both for his attainments and general excellence Whitney's friend deserved to wear this badge of fame. JAN DOUSA, or Van der Does, was a man of highest repute and patriotism in the war which achieved his country's independence. He was lord of Noordwijck, in Holland, a village domain situated between Leyden and the sea. Here he was born December 6th 1545. He passed his youth in study, chiefly at Louvain, but spent some time in England and France. In 1565 he married Elizabeth de Zwylen, by whom he had twelve children. Of these four were sons, all illustrious like their father for the love of literature and for worth of character. To estimate these it will be sufficient to read P. Hofmanni Peerlkamp's "Liber De vita, doctrina et facultate Nederlandorum, qui Carmina Latina composuerunt," and the Oration of Daniel Heinsius in commemoration of the virtues of the elder Dousa on his death in 1604.

Harlemi 1838, pp. 202, 178 and 406.

At the celebrated siege of Leyden in 1574 Jan Dousa devoted himself to his country's cause, and therefore was selected by William the Silent to be governor of the town and curator of Amstelodami, 1685, pp. 619-659.

* It is singular that the bulky tome, "Philosophia Imaginum," 8vo, pp. 847, by C. F. Menestrerius, contains no reference to the swan. The eagle, the phœnix, the pelican, the ostrich, &c. are very frequently introduced, but Apollo's bird is unnoticed. No less than two hundred symbolical applications of the eagle are numbered and catalogued, besides seventy specially devoted to the bird of Jove.

the recently formed university, destined in a very few years to occupy a high station among the seats of learning and science. Van der Does distinguished himself as a philologist, an historian and a poet, as well as a magistrate.

He was the historian of his native land, and besides wrote very learned notes on Sallust, and critical remarks on Horace, Plautus, Tibullus, &c. Theodore De Bry presents his portrait to us as "poet and orator," and Boissard's brief notice of his character styles him "A man and a hero most worthy of memory as well from the merits of his ancestors as from his own virtues." Plate LV.

His sons will be named hereafter in the note to Whitney's emblem, p. 206. For other particulars consult Iöcher's Allgemeines Gelehrten Lexicon, vol ii. col. 205; also "Biographie Universelle," vol. ii. p. 619. Leipsig, 1750.

EMBLEM, p. 130.— To Sir HUGHE CHOLMELEY Knight. Bibl. Cotton. Claudius CIII. Plut. xxi. F. 4.

"Of those that were honoured with the order of knighthoode in the tyme of the triumphant reigne of Kinge Henry the eight," are numbered three Cholmeleys: sir Roger Cholmeley knighted anno Dom. 1536, sir Hugh Cholmeley of Cheshire, and sir Richard Cholmeley of Yorkshire."* These two are styled "Knightes made in Scotlande," "after the destruction of Edenborough and other townes" in the year 1544.

The knight to whom the emblem of the seven wise men is inscribed receives from Fuller a high meed of praise. "Sir HUGH CHOLMLEY, or CHOLMONDELEIGH. This worthy person bought his knighthood in the field at Leigh in Scotland. He was five times high sheriff of this county, i.e. Chester (and sometimes of Flintshire), and for many years one of the two sole deputies lieutenants thereof. For a good space he was vice-president of the marches of Wales under the Right Honourable Sir Henry Sidney, knight, I conceive it was during his absence in Ireland. For fifty years together he was esteemed a father of Worthies, vol. i. p. 289.

* Of the Yorkshire Cholmleys there was also a sir Hugh, distinguished as a royalist under Charles I. See "The Memoirs of sir Hugh Cholmley addressed to his two sons; in which he gives some account of his family, and the distress they underwent in the civil wars, and how far he himself was engaged in them; taken from an original manuscript in his own handwriting, now in the possession of Nathaniel Cholmley, of Whitby and Howsham, in the county of York." London, 1787, 4to.

his country, and dying anno 15— was buried in the church of Malpasse, under a tomb of alabaster, with great lamentation of all sorts of people, had it not mitigated their mourning, that he left a son of his own name, heir to his virtues and estates."

King's Vale Royal, pt. ii. pp. 55 and 56.

In the main features Fuller borrows his account from Webb's Itinerary, but does not speak of sir Hugh Cholmondeley's "admirable gifts of Wisdome, Temperance, Continency, Liberality, Hospitality, and many virtues of his life, and godly departure at his end," nor record the Encomium in his memory which Webb presented to sir Hugh the younger:

> "Then for the last adieu to his pure Soul,
> Which leaves us gain for loss, and mirth for moan;
> I wish the Title might his Fame inroll,
> And be engrav'n with Gold upon his Stone.
> We have inter'd his reverend Body here,
> That was our Countries Father 50. Year."

Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii. pp. 356 and 78; vol. iii. pp. 198 and 199.

From his only surviving son are descended the noble families of Cholmondeley castle and of Vale Royal, in Cheshire; and from his only daughter Frances, the wife of Thomas Wilbraham, of Woodhey, celebrated by Whitney at p. 199, the excellent Lady Done, of Utkinton, and that branch of the Wilbrahams which finally became merged by the marriages of the coheiresses about 1680, into the families of Middleton, of Chirk castle, and of Lionel Tollemache, lord Huntingtour and earl of Dysart in Scotland.

Plate XXXIV.

EMBLEM, p. 131.—To Sir ARTHURE MANWARINGE Knight.

Bibl. Cotton. Claudius CIII. Plut. xxi. F.

Ormerod, vol. i. p. 373; vol. ii. p. 229; vol. iii. p. 325.

In the reign of Henry VIII. two "John Maynwaringes," each bearing for crest an ass's head, obtained the honour of knighthood, one in France in 1513, the other along with William Stanley, of Hooton, and John Stanley, of Hondford, natural son of the bishop of Ely, probably in the same year, though not on the same occasion. The first of the sir John Maynwaringes thus knighted was of Over Peover in Cheshire, the second of "Ichtfeild" in Shropshire. The fine and very curious Chartularium Mainwaringianum,* compiled by William Dugdale, Norry King of Arms in 1669, and preserved at Over Peover hall, records:

* This Mainwaring Chartulary begins in the seventh year of William Rufus, A.D. 1093.

"Hereafter foloyn the names of the Captayns and pety Captayns w^th^ the Bagges in ther standerts of the Aremy and vantgard of the Kigns Lefftenant enteryng into France the xvi^h^ day of Iune in the fift yere of the Reign of Kyng Henry the Eight. George Erle of Shrouesbury, the Kyngs Leftenant, Thomas Erle of Derby, S^r^ William Perpoynt;" and then follows "Sir John Maynwaryng of Eghtfeld, (Shropsh.) bayryth gold a Asse-hed haltered Sabul and a cresscent upon the same: And Rondell Maynwaryng hys pety Captayn. The said S^r^ John made Knyght at Lysk."

The Mainwarings of Over Peover, of Kermincham, and of Ightfield, as sir Peter Leycester assures us, were descended from a common ancestor in the reign of Richard II., "Randle Manwaring of Over-Pever Esquire," "stiled commonly Honkyn Manwaring in the Language of those times." "He was a Courtier, stiled Armiger Regis, the King's Servant & Sagittarius de Corona, 21 Rich. 2." Historical Antiquities, p. 334.

At a remote period of the Ightfield Mainwarings was Roger Mainwaring, bishop of Hereford, confessor to Henry IV.; and in later times, 1668, Arthur Mainwaring a poetical and political writer. Gent. Magazine, 1821, pt. i. p. 213.

"Sir John Maynweringe of Ichtfeild" was the father of the "Sir Arthure Manwaringe" whom Whitney celebrates, and whom "the handes of Edward Duke of Somersett Lord Protector" made a knight at Newcastle, October 1st 1547, on the return from the invasion of Scotland, as "Sir Arthure Manwerynge." Sir Arthur married Margaret, the eldest daughter of sir Randle Manwaring,* of Over Peover, knight. "The Lady Margaret" died in November 1574, and her husband at the end of August 1590. He had been sheriff of Shropshire in 1561 and 1575, and had served his native county in parliament in 1558-9. Bibl. Cotton. Claudius CIII. Plut. xxi. F. 4. Chart. Mainwar.

A daughter of sir Arthur Mainwaring, Mary, was married to the Richard Cotton of Combermere, to whom, as we have seen, Whitney dedicates two emblems. After a long descent, and after Emb. 65 and 200.

* This sir Randle died in 1557. His nephew, the second sir Randle, rebuilt the hall of Over Peover in 1585-6, at the very time when The Choice of Emblemes was a printing, and named his eighth child, born May 17th 1585, Arthur, the godfathers being "Sir Arthure Maynwaringe of Ightfelde," and "George Brereton of Ashley Esquier," and "Mystris Anne Tankarde of Burroe-brigge Godmother."

in fact the old line of the Mainwarings of Over Peover had become extinct in 1797, a Cotton of Combermere, Sophia, daughter of sir Robert S. Cotton, bart., in 1803, became the wife of sir Henry Mainwaring Mainwaring, bart., of the second creation, and thus their son, the present sir Harry Mainwaring, bart., re-enters into the blood of the old line, first through the Mainwarings of Ightfield, and then by a common ancestry in Randle Manwaring of the reign of Richard II. Thence sir Peter Leycester traces the pedigree to William Manwaring during the reign of Henry III., and sir Thomas Mainwaring, sir Peter's stout opponent, carries up the stream through Roger de Mesnilgarin (one of the old ways of spelling* Mainwaring) to Ranulphus, who held Warmincham and Over Peover &c. in fee from the Conqueror himself.

Historical Antiquities, p. 331.

The old feudal wars had ceased, but as exciting a contest raged from the year 1673 to 1679 as to Amicia, the daughter of Hugh Cyvelioc, earl of Chester, 1153-1181, and "wife of Raufe Manwaring, sometime judge of Chester," under Henry the Second, and Richard the First. Five hundred years after her birth no less than twelve books issued from the press on behalf of, or against her legitimacy. "Sir Thomas Mainwaring of Peover in Cheshire" claimed her to be in the line of his ancestry, and that she was born in wedlock; "Sir Peter Leycester, baronet," maintained the contrary. The whole controversy is summed up with great impartiality by Ormerod. "The essential question" "was long argued with great ability on the part of Sir Peter Leycester, but some of his arguments are ascertained to rest on the authority of incorrect transcripts, and it is probable that few will read the last book of his opponent" "without allowing the victory to Sir T. M. The opinions of the greater part of (if not all) the judges who were consulted, were given in favour of Amicia's legitimacy, and the authorities of the College of Arms have also been in her favour, under the express sanction of Sir William Dugdale."

History of Cheshire, vol. i. pp. 28-32, note.

Plate X. EMBLEM, p. 132.—To EDWARDE DIER Esquier.

* Between the years 1093 and 1669 there have been established by autographs or valid legal documents one hundred and thirty-one ways of spelling the name; "to which are added," in a paper at Peover hall, "263 other variations," "making together the Number of 394 Diversifyings thereof."

In the reign of Elizabeth the name of Dier or Dyer was celebrated for eminence both in law and in literature. Sir Thomas Dyer and sir James Dyer had indeed been knighted at the beginning of Edward the Sixth's reign, and sir Richard Dyer, son and heir to sir James, was "dubbed 1585 the 4th of Aprill." Sir James is mentioned as "Sergeant at the Lawe" and speaker of the house of commons in 1552.

Names and Arms of Knights, Brit. Bibl. Cotton. Claudius CIII. Plut. xxi. F. 4.

Edward Dyer, so praised by Whitney, a poet and a courtier of the Elizabethan age, was born about 1540, and educated at Oxford. After travelling abroad he obtained considerable celebrity in Elizabeth's court, and was held in much respect. He was the friend of sir Philip Sidney, and if the little poetical narrative on Whitney's 197th page be true, as there is no reason to doubt, Sidney held Dyer in the highest esteem. This too is especially evidenced in Sidney's will, in which he bequeathed one-half of his books to sir Fulke Greville, and the other half to Mr. Edward Dyer.

Emb. p. 135.

Zouch's Memoirs of Sidney, p. 324.

In the emblem to Dyer, designated "The glory of the pen," our Cheshire poet declares his high admiration of Sidney:

Emb. p. 196.

"Wherefore, for to extoll his name in what I might,
This Emblem lo, I did present, vnto this woorthie Knight,
Who did the same refuse, as not his proper due:
And at the first, his sentence was, it did belonge to you."

"The laurell leafe," Whitney affirms, had been prepared for Dyer;—for Sidney,

"The goulden pen;
The honours that the Muses give, vnto the rarest men."

Sir Edward Dyer, who was knighted in 1596, was several times employed by his sovereign on embassies of importance, particularly to Denmark in 1589. The chancellorship of the order of the garter was conferred upon him, but like most of the courtiers he experienced some of Elizabeth's caprices. He partook of the credulity of the age, especially with respect to the power of chemistry to transmute the base into the noble metals. His death is said not to have taken place until 1610, but an extract from the burial register of St. Saviour's, Southwark, decides the point: "1607, May 11, S[r] Edward Dyer, Knight, in the Chancel."

Notes and Queries, vol. ii. p. 335.

His name as an English poet will never be forgotten while the beauty, force and simplicity are appreciated of the noble stanzas beginning

> "My mynde to me a kyngdome is,
> Such preasente joyes therein I fynde,
> That it excells all other blisse,
> That earth affordes or growes by kynde."

Bliss's Edition, vol. i. pp. 740-743.

He was the author of certain pastoral odes and madrigals in "England's Helicon," and of other poems both printed and in manuscript. The Athenæ Oxonienses gives an account of these and of his life. EMBLEMS, pp. 134, 198.—To EDWARD PASTON Esquier. The family of the Pastons of Paston, in Norfolk, "is said by most historians to have come into England three years after the conquest," A.D. 1069. The name is of very frequent occurrence in Blomefield's voluminous Norfolk, in which there is a long account of the family. The Edward Paston whom Whitney celebrates appears to have been the grandson of sir William Paston, knt., of Oxnead in Norfolk, who was an eminent barrister and judge, and who, living to a great age, died in 1554. He had five sons, Erasmus, Henry, John, Clement and Thomas. Clement was a distinguished man under Henry, Edward, Mary and Elizabeth, and died February 18th 1599, appointing Edward Paston one of his executors. Thomas was knighted by king Henry VIII. in 1544 "at Bolleyne after the conquest of the towne," and he was father of sir Edward Paston who died in 1630. This Edward appears to have been the one whom Whitney distinguishes by devoting to him two of his emblems; and the conjecture is rendered very probable from the fact that Whitney held the office of under-steward in the town of Great Yarmouth, and consequently so become acquainted with the Norfolk Pastons.

specting their authors will reveal enough for us to know about the ancestors of Edward Paston. "The Paston Letters consist principally of the correspondence, from about 1440 to 1505, between the members and connexions of the respectable Norfolk family of that name, afterwards Earls of Yarmouth, of which the head, till his death in 1444, was Sir William Paston, Knight, one of the justices of the Common Pleas, and popularly called the 'Good Judge;' and afterwards, in succession, his eldest son, John Paston, Esq., who died in 1466; and the eldest and next eldest sons of the latter, Sir John Paston, a distinguished soldier, who died in 1479; and John Paston, Esq., also a military man, and eventually made a knight banneret by Henry VII., at the battle of Stoke in 1487, who survived till 1503." EMBLEM, p. 136.—To the very hon^ble CHARLES CALTHORPE, Deputy of the Queen's Majesty in Ireland a gentleman in every way to be most highly respected by me.

"Charles Calthorpe Esq., was a member of the Norfolk family of that name who had been seated at Calthorpe from the conquest. He was appointed steward of Yarmouth in 1573 and resigned in 1580, being employed by the Queen in Ireland." With Windham, Flowerdewe and Harbrowne he was, 31st May 1575, named on a commission to settle some disputes between Yarmouth and the Cinque Ports, and he was one of the company whom Whitney records as visiting Scratby island August 2nd 1580. Manship's Yarmouth, vol. i. p. 295. Plate XIII.

It is from sir William Calthorpe, knight, born in 1404 and dying in 1494, and from his four sons, that "several distinct branches are derived of this honourable and knyghtly family." Among the knights of Edward the Sixth's and of Elizabeth's creation were "Sir Philippe Calthorpe," and "Sir Will^m Calthorpe;" there was also in 1589 a sir Martin Calthorpe, knight, lord-mayor of London. Gent. Magazine, 1839, pt. ii. p. 238.

Whitney's emblem is evidence of the high office which Charles Calthorpe held in Ireland under the queen; and sir John Perrot's Government of Ireland, a work published in 1624, records the same fact.* The name appears as the author of "The Relation between a Lord of the Manor and the Copyholder his Tenant" in

* The name however is not recorded in sir Peter Leycester's Catalogue of the Chief Governors of Ireland, p. 82.

1635, and is printed with Sir Edward Coke's Copyholder in 1650, but probably it is not the same person as the "Deputy of the Queen's Majesty in Ireland."

EMBLEM, p. 137.—To MILES CORBET Esquier.

From Henry III. 1247 to Elizabeth 1592 the office of sheriff of Shropshire was held by a Corbet on twenty occasions, and from the time of the conquest, when Roger Corbet held lands under the earl of Shrewsbury, their possessions descended to sir Andrew Corbet, bart., by twenty-three generations. It is far from unlikely that Miles Corbet was of the Shropshire family, and a schoolfellow of Whitney's at Audlem, just on the borders of Cheshire and Shropshire. Among the Corbets mentioned by Ormerod however there is not one bearing the name Miles; neither, as far as appears from Burke's Extinct Baronetage, is there among the Corbets of Stoke, of Moreton Corbet, or of Stoke and Adderley.

The knightage under Henry VIII. furnishes "Sir Richard Corbett, 1523;" and under Edward VI. sir Andrew Corbet and sir Richard Corbet, 1547.

The heir of John Corbet of Sprowston, in Norfolk, living in the reign of Henry VII., was sir Miles Corbet, knight, and he left a son, sir Thomas Corbet, whose second son was Miles Corbet, of Lincoln's Inn, one of the registrars of chancery, but he lived at too recent a period to be Whitney's Miles, for he was one of the judges of the ill-fated Charles I., and suffered death as a regicide April 19th, 1662. He was of an ancient Norfolk family, as appears from Blomefield's Norfolk, vol. v. p. 1372.

EMBLEM, p. 138.—To HVGHE CHOLMELEY Esquier.

Historians tell us, "The Cholmondeleys and Egertons are descended from the same stock; Robert, ancestor of the Cholmondeleys, being a younger brother, and Philip, ancestor of the Egertons, a younger son of David, Baron of Malpas, who, in or about the reign of Henry III., took their family names from the places of their respective residences. Robert de Cholmondeley was the lineal ancestor of Sir Hugh Cholmondeley, Knight" (i.e. of Whitney's "HVGHE CHOLMELEY Esquier"), who died in 1601. From Hugh the third son of this sir Hugh the present marquis of Cholmondeley is descended, and from the fourth son, the lord Delamere of Vale Royal. Of the daughters, Mary, married sir George Calveley of Lea, knight; Lettice, sir Richard Grosvenor of Eaton, bart.; and Frances, Peter Venables, baron of Kinderton. Leycester's Historical Antiquities, p. 345.

The helmet which here enters into Whitney's emblem is doubly symbolical. It appears from "Armes in Cheshire after the maner of the Alphabeth," that the squire's helmet, the badge of war, was borne generally by the warlike race of the Cholmondeleys, and was appropriated by the various families of that ancient house.* King's Vale Royal, p. 103.

Cheshire was not represented in the parliament of England until the year 1546, when Thomas Holcroft was elected. "Hvghe Cholmeley Esquier" was chosen to serve as one of the knights for the county, along with Thomas Egerton, then solicitor-general to the queen. This was in the year 1585, the year when Whitney presented his emblems to the earl of Leicester. His descendants since then have represented Cheshire in no less than twelve parliaments, and, with one short interval, the office of lord-lieutenant of the county was held from 1708 to 1783 by four earls of Cholmondeley in succession. Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. i. pp. 67-69.

Our Hugh Cholmondeley was born in 1552, and obtained his knighthood at the Spanish invasion in 1588. He was sheriff of Cheshire in 1589, and died in 1601. His wife was "Mary, Daughter and sole Heir of Christopher Holford of Holford," near Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii. p. 78.

* The Italian version of Alciat gives the following stanzas:

This emblem has a remarkable history; it was adopted from 1515 to 1560, by Francis I. and Francis II., kings of France, as their device, teaching, "duris in rebus fidem explorandam," That fidelity must be put to the proof in times of difficulty. It is, moreover, one of the emblems to which Shakespeare expressly refers, for he represents "the device" and "the word" of a certain knight as almost identical with those of Whitney; thus

In emblem p. 89 the initials W. "During the time he held his fellowship he travelled into various countries of Europe and Asia. He himself states that he had seen Antioch, Constantinople, Jerusalem, and other eastern cities." In 1561 he was appointed master of Eton school and discharged the duties of it for ten years, and from 1573 to 1580 or 1581 he was head-master of St. Paul's school. His death occurred, it is said, about August 15th, 1594. Athen. Cantab. vol. ii. p. 175.

Respecting his works, of which a list is given in the Athenæ Cantabrigienses, it may be said that Ames marks the Famagosta as printed at Antwerp, and notes six Latin verses on sir Thomas Chaloner de Republicâ Anglorum instaurandâ. Typ. Antiq. pp. 653 and 1070.

Roscoe, when speaking of the reputation acquired by the Florentines in the cultivation of that branch of Roman literature: "Though some possess a considerable share of merit, not one of them can contend in point of poetical excellence with Politiano, who in his composition approaches nearer to the standard of the ancients than any man of his time." Of his character, erudition and misfortunes, a most interesting account is presented by the historian of Lorenzo de' Medici, and to that history we refer our readers. His death took place in 1494, in the fortieth year of his age. An edition of his works in folio was printed at Brixia, Brescia, M.CCCC.LXXXVI, and at Bâle, 8vo, 3 vols. 1550, folio 1553. Of course the Biographical Dictionaries do not omit to mention so eminent a scholar.

EMBLEM, p. 165.—To M. THOMAS MYNORS.

The name belongs both to Gloucestershire and Hertfordshire. Rudder, in his Gloucestershire, mentions a Gilbert de Myners about the end of the reign of king Stephen, and Henry de Myners of Westbury under king John purchasing a licence to enclose a park. Clutterbuck records how "Ralph Minors of Hertford, Gent., schoolmaster, gave to the Parish of All Saints £10, the interest to be yearly disposed of, half in the purchase of three pairs of white gloves for the Mayor, Justice of the Peace, and Minister of All Saints, if they come to the breaking up of the scholars of the said school at Christmas, and the other half to the best deserving scholars there."

Of Thomas Mynors however I have gleaned no certain information. One of the name, the Rev. Willoughby Mynors, M.A., curate of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, preached a seditious sermon June 10th 1716, and was committed to custody to answer for it, but whether of the same family no evidence is adduced to show.

EMBLEM, p. 166.—To my vncle Geffrey Cartwrighte.

The conjecture has been made that Whitney's mother was of the family of Cartwright. It is a great puritan name, Thomas Cartwright, born in 1535, and dying in 1603, having borne it with high honour through much persecution. There appears however no real evidence to determine that Geffrey Cartwright was of this stock; it is most probable that he was of the same neighbourhood with the Whitneys, for Sheppenhall, in the township of Newhall, a few miles from Nantwich, was owned by the Cartwrights before the year 1600. In the registry of marriages at Acton church we find, 1662, "Inter Thomam Cartwright et Ann Roe Decembris 23." Sir Peter Leycester records, in 1666, among the landowners of Sale, "Geffrey Cartwright Gentleman. His lands in Sale were formerly bought from Massy of Sale." Ralph Churton supposes that Geffrey Cartwright belonged to "a branch of the Cartwrights of Aynho, Northamptonshire, some of whom were seated at Wrenbury (Bridges' Northamptonshire, vol. i. p. 137), and are recorded among the benefactors of the church." Whalley, in his History and Antiquities of Northamptonshire, gives the pedigree of Hugh Cartwright, from which it appears that of his descendants one was John Cartwright of Aston in Wrenbury, whose son Richard, that died in 1637 at the age of 74, married Mary, the daughter of sir John Egerton of Egerton, and was contemporary with, if not a relative of, Geffrey Whitney.

The manor of Ravenscroft, a small township about one mile from Middlewich, passed by the marriage of Margery Ravenscroft with Roger Croxton to the Croxtons, and after five generations was vested with other lands in William Croxton, who died June 21st 1579. His son and heir, "John Croxton, of Ravenscroft, gent., who died April 24, 1599, leaving a son George fourteen years of age," was probably the friend to whom Whitney in 1586 devoted the emblem of a child in the cradle and of an infirm man on crutches. This John Croxton owned a third part of the manor of Bexton, near Knutsford, which he sold "to the lady Mary Cholmondley of Holford;" the Cholmondeleys sold their share, and the whole manor vested in the Daniel family, passed to the Duckenfields and Astleys. From John Astley, the painter, "it was purchased by dame Catherine Leicester, for her son sir J. F. Leicester bart.," and it is now the property of lord de Tabley.

parliament; and in 1650, when four regiments were raised in the county, he had the colonelcy of one of the regiments, composed of the men of Northwich hundred, and part of Nantwich. The castle of Chester was also under his care at the time of sir George Booth's attempt in 1659, and was summoned by sir George Booth and sir Thomas Middleton; to which the governor replied, 'That as perfidiousness in him was detestable, so the castle which he kept for the parliament of England was disputable; and if they would have it, they must fight for it; for the best blood that ran in his veins, in defence thereof, should be as a sluice to fill up the castle trenches.'" The consequence of Croxton's steadiness was the division of the forces of the insurgent royalists, which led to the defeat of Middleton at Prees heath, and of Booth at Winnington.

Colonel Croxton's wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Holland of Denton, Lancashire.

I am informed that a notice of Matthew Pattenson will appear in the forthcoming volume, vol. iii. of the Athenæ Cantabrigienses, which is now in the printer's hands; and to that I refer the reader.

Did the distance of time between 1586 and 1623 allow we should suppose that Whitney's Pattenson was the author of "The Image of Bothe Chvrches, Hierusalem and Babel, vnitie and Confvsion, obedience and sedition;" but it is by no means clear that the Pattensons of 1586 and of 1623 were the same person.

EMBLEM, p. 172. — To the youth at the school of AUDLEM in England.

AUDLEM, or as it was anciently written, Aldelime or Adelym, is a small market town, with a fine old church on the crest of a hill, about six miles from Nantwich on the line of railway from Nantwich to Market Drayton. The whole parish comprises an area of above 12,000 acres, bounded on the south by Shropshire, on the north by Acton, to the east by Wybunbury, and to the west by Wrenbury.

Though Whitney's birth-place was in the parish of Acton, yet that homestead on the banks of the Weaver is nearly six miles from Acton church, and under two miles from Audlem church and school. We have in this fact the reason why his earliest instruction was obtained at Audlem; that town was near his home, and by pleasant Weaver's banks he would morning and evening pursue his way for the learning which in after life he used so well. Taking Whitney's home or Audlem's church of St. James as centres, there are spreading round them the various places with which the poet would be chiefly familiar,—Combermere, Woodhay, Shippenhall, Wrenbury, Nantwich, Acton, Wybunbury, and perchance Ightfield and Cholmondeley. Here dwelt his friends and relatives, or those whom his youth had been taught to hold in honour.

The present grammar school of Audlem was founded or rather endowed in 1655 by sir William Bolton and Mr. Gamull, citizens of London; but it is evident from this emblem that the school existed for at least a century before; and not unlikely is it from its central situation that here the schoolboy Geffrey Whitney formed acquaintance if not friendship with R. Cotton, G. Salmon, Hugh Cholmeley, George Manwaring, John Croxton, Arthur Starkey, and others of the country round.

Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. iii. p. 248.

The venerable church of St. James, when Ralph Sandford was vicar, 1557-1582, doubtless often heard the tread of young Geffrey's feet; and there rests one, a scholar of the same school, whose gravestone records as "the Modest Charitable and Dutifull Daniel Evans, Son to Mr. Evans School Master. He departed aged 14. 1712. God's Will be done." The father's grave is close by, and were it but to show that men of worth and learning have presided over the school where Whitney was trained, we add his epitaph, in Latin, as becomes a scholar's fame:

The Masseys, who held Tatton, near Knutsford, from the reign of Henry III. to 1475, possessed lands in Audlem down to 1457, when "Sir Geffrey Massy of Tatton, Knight," settled his lands in Audlem and Denfield on his illegitimate son John Massy, with whose descendants they remained until 1666 or later. Hugh Massey, the fifth in a direct line from John, married Elizabeth, sister of Hugh Whitney of Cool-lane in Wrenbury, near Audlem, and she in all probability was one of the same family with Geffrey Whitney. This Hugh Massey died in 1646, and was buried at Audlem.

Emblem, p. 173. — To the very learned Stephan Limbert Master of the School at Norwich.

Ormerod, vol. iii. p. 230.

On the supposition that "Nordovicensis" was Northwich in Cheshire it has been conjectured that Limbert had been Whitney's tutor, first at Audlem and next at Northwich, before the poet went to Oxford. The Latin name means Norwich in Norfolk, and through the courtesy of the Rev. Augustus Jessopp, head master of king Edward VI. school in that city, I have been informed that for thirty-two years, from 1570 to 1602, Stephen Limbert was master of that school. As to dates this account differs very materially from the epitaph which Blomefield and the Coopers give, namely, thirty-five years of service, and dying in 1589. But thirty-five years make the service commence in 1554, some years before his matriculation at Cambridge as a sizar of Magdalen college. We stay not to reconcile the dates; certain it is he was head master of Norwich school, and on one of Elizabeth's progresses, in August 1578, made an oration in Latin "to the most illustrious Princess Elizabeth, Queen of England, France and Ireland." Little is known of his success as a teacher, but "a grateful and eminent pupil," Robert de Naunton, "many years afterwards" set up a memorial of one whom he names "an excellent Master and a most beloved Preceptor," and averred that he died "full of Dayes and of Comfort in the Multitude and Proficiency of his Scholars."

Blomefield's Norfolk, vol. ii. p. 531. Athen. Cantab. vol. ii. p. 61.

His power of writing Latin verses may be judged of by the ten elegiac lines which are prefixed to Whitney's emblems, and of which the translation in the Introductory Dissertation is a free approximation.

EMBLEM, p. 175. — "Otiose semper egentes," The idle ever destitute.

A very fine amplification of a similar subject in "Le Théâtre des bons Engins." Whitney's power and genius will appear by comparing together the simple beauty of the French verses with the no less simple and beautiful lines of the English, in which the thoughts are carried out, rounded and polished without losing anything of natural grace. In the French the reader may notice the contrivance for indicating e silent.

Plate XXXI.

EMBLEM, p. 176. — "Semper præsto esse infortunia," Ill luck is always at hand.

The subject treated of by Whitney is undoubtedly the same with that of Brant, namely, the gamblers, the difference being that the Englishman speaks of "three carelesse dames," the German, in his French translation, folio 50, of four. It is merely as suggestive to Whitney of his subject that Brant's emblem is adduced; the devices agree, but not the methods of illustration.

Ch. ii. sect. ii. pp. 41 and 43.

As we have seen in the Introductory Dissertation, it was in the parish of Acton, by which Nantwich is nearly surrounded, that Whitney was born, yet "the Namptwiche" is a term which comprehends the district round, and the people truly were the poet's "countrimen."

The Register of the Church.

The fearful calamity with which the town was visited is thus described by an eye-witness. On the 10th of December 1583, "chaunced a most terrible and vehement fyre, beginninge at the Water-lode, aboute six of the clock at nighte, in a kitchen, by brewinge. The wynde being very boysterouse, increased the said fyre, whiche verie vehementlie burned and consumed in the space of fifteen houres six hundred bayes of buyldinges and could not be stayed neither by laboure nor pollice, which I thoughte good to commende unto the posteritie as a favoureable punishment of the Almightie in destroying the buildings and goodes onlie, but sparinge the lyves of manye people, which, consideringe the tyme, space, and perill, were in great jopardie, yet by God's mercie, but onlie two persones that perished by fyre."

One who not long after the fire in sober prose described "the newe NAMPWICHE," scarcely departed from Whitney's fond eulogium,

"A spectacle for anie man's desire."

King's Vale Royal, pt. ii. p. 68.

That writer says: "The Buildings within the same Town are very fair and neat, and every street adorned with some speciall mansions of Gentlemen of good worth, the middle and the principal parts of the Town being all new buildings, by reason of a lamentable fire which happened there in Anno 1583, that consumed in one night all the dwellings from the River side, to the other side of the Church, which Church it self by the great mercy of God escaped, and was left standing naked without neighbours, saving onely the school-house, in a few hours; yet such were the estates of many the Inhabitants, and so graciously did Queen Elizabeth of blessed memory favour them, with her own earnest farthering of a Collection through the whole Kingdom, and the businesse so well managed by the care and industry of Sir Hugh Cholmly, Mr. John Masterton, and other chief agents in the same, that the whole scite and frame of the Town so suddenly ruined, was with great speed re-edified in that beautifull manner that now it is."

Our author adds: "The Church is very large, and of so beautifull a structure composed in form of a crosse, like the great Minsters or Cathedrals, and the Steeple erected in the middle Juncture of the Crosse, with fair Iles on each side." Plates XV. and XV*a*.

To all its original beauty that fair church has lately been restored by the munificence and zealous love of many hearts, the widow's mite vying with the rich man's offering; and to all who have contributed to this worthy work there cannot be a better thought, that the veneration and regard of the present day have re-established and renewed the temple which the piety of a past age had founded. The poet's words are again fulfilled:

"an other Phœnix rare
With speede dothe rise most beautifull and faire."

That fable of the phœnix indeed is one with which all ages and many nations have been familiar. Herodotus, Pliny, Horapollo, among the ancients; Gabriel Symeoni, Claude Paradin, Arnold Freitag, Reusner, and Whitney, with some others among the emblematists, serve to swell the wonder and the praise. We are told, "in honour of Queen Jane, who died willingly to save her child, Edward VI., a phœnix was represented on a funeral fire, with this motto, NASCATUR UT ALTER, That another may be born." As the phœnix is always alone, and the only bird of its kind in the world, so are excellent things that are of marvellous rarity; hence it was somewhat proudly borne as the device of Madame Elenor of Austria, queen dowager of France. Also, "My Lady Bona of Savoy, the mother of John Galeaz, Duke of Milan, in her widowed state, took the phœnix for her emblem. with the words,* 'being made lonely I follow God alone.'" The Plate XXXIX., Freitag. Gent. Magazine, 1819, pt. ii.

* The original text, as given in Symeoni's Devises ov Emblemes Heroiqves et morales, à Lyon 1561, p. 238, is: "Madame Bone de Sauoye mere de Iean Galeaz, Duc de Milan, se trouuant vefue, feit faire vne deuise en ses Testons d'vne Fenix au milieu d'vn feu auec ces paroles: SOLA FACTA SOLVM DEVM SEQVOR. Voulant signifier que comme il n'y a au monde qu'vne Fenix, tout ainsi estant demeuree seulette, ne vouloit aymer sinô le seul Dieu, pour viure en apres eternellement." Plate LXII.

phœnix too is typical of long duration for the soul, and of the resurrection of Christ and of all mankind.*

The Lay of the Phœnix, translated by G. Stephens, 1844.

An Anglo-Saxon poem of the eleventh century embodies both the legends and the applications of this ancient fable. After describing the process by which

> "As from round eggs he > Eagerly crept him
> Sheer from the shell," the author goes on to narrate the final production of the marvellous creature:

As in Plate XXXIX.

> "Soon then thereafter, Bird waxing quickly
> With feathers rich fretted, Fresh as to-fore, and
> He soars as at first—all Fitly in all things
> Blooming and brightsome, Sunder'd from sin."

It is then nothing wonderful that, on hearing of the town of his "countrimen" rising from its ashes to a glory it had never before attained, Whitney should assume as its device,

> "The Phœnix rare, with fethers freshe of hewe."

EMBLEM, p. 183. — The inverted torch.

Plate LVII.

This device is found in Symeoni and Giovio's Tetrastichi Morali, and also in Paradin's Devises Héroïques, but the plate in illustration is from the English translation of Paradin, published in 1591, which curiously enough differs from the original as well as from Whitney, in presenting the torch nearly upright instead of inverted. The invention of the device is thus accounted for: "In the exile or banishment of the Helvetians neer Millan, after the decease of Francis their king, the Lord of Saint Valier, the father of the Ladie Diana of Poitiers Dutchesse of Valentinois, and gouernour ouer an hundreth noble knights carried a standard about, wherein was pictured a burning Torch turned vpside downe, the waxe melting and quenching the same with this sentence, Qui me alit me extinguit, that is, He that feedeth me, killeth me. Which simbole was framed for a certain noble woman's sake, Heroicall Deuises, London, 1591, pp. 357 and 358.

Plate LXI.

* So in the device on the title-page of Giovio's Dialogo, printed by Giolito at Venice in 1556, the phœnix appears rising above the world; the mottoes being "SEMPER EADEM," Always the same, and "DE LA MIA MORTE ETERNA VITA," From my death I live eternal life.

willing to insinuate thereby that as her beautie and comelines did please his minde, so might it cast him into danger of his life."

On pages 301, 302 and 311 of the Essays Literary and Bibliographical the subject of the inverted torch and its motto is treated of; and we now refer to Symeoni's text to show that Daniell is far from accurate in the information he professes to give as to the origin of the device; and that Paradin omits the not unimportant fact that Saint Valier's motto was but an imitation of that of the king his master,—"NVTRISCO ET EXTINGVO." Plates LXII. and LXIII.

EMBLEM, p. 183.—Engraving wrongs on marble.

Whitney's device is identical with that of Paradin's, but may be compared with the similar Impresa in the Tetrastichi Morali, or rather in the Devises Héroïqves et Morales, from which Paradin copied, without however taking the highly ornamented border. The Italian stanza is to the following effect: Plates XXXVII. and LXII.

> "Each one that lives may be swift passion's slave,
> And through a powerful will at times delight
> In causing others harm and terrors fright:
> The injured doth those wrongs in marble grave."

If comment be required we may resort to Symeon's Emblemes Héroïqves et Morales, p. 230, "Povr vn homme inivstement offense." Plate LXII.

EMBLEMS, pp. 185, 186.—To the very learned STEPHEN BULL.

A name the echoes of which have sounded through the chief libraries of Holland and Belgium without obtaining any reply. St. or Stephen Bull seems to have been one that has left no mark on Whitney's century. The name however is not unknown to history. On the expedition into France in April 1513 it is mentioned that the admiral Howard, among other persons of note, was accompanied by sir Stephen Bull. And of Flodden field, September 9th 1513, it is recorded: "In this Battle the Vanguard was led by the Lord Thomas Howard, who had with him," along with several lords and knights who are named, "Sir Stephen Bull." Whitney's Stephen Bull may have been this knight's son or grandson. In Elizabeth's reign there were also Bulls in Hertfordshire, for Clutterbuck registers among the bailiffs of Hertford "In 1578 Richard Bull, Gent." Tindal's Rapin, Edit. 1743, vol. i. p. 721. Hertford, vol. ii. p. 147.

If we might resort to the last refuge of a discomfited critic, we would suggest a misprint. In conformity with the subject of the second emblem devoted to this learned man, namely, the Music of Orpheus, he should be one who was skilful, learned and wise, and

"if his musicke faile, his curtesie is suche
That none so rude, and base of minde, but hee reclaimes them muche."

Now there was an Englishman of Whitney's century, one JOHN BULL, in whom these qualities were united, and to whom there was great propriety in dedicating as well the Quinctilian emblem as that which celebrates the praise of Orpheus. He was a native of Somersetshire,* born about the year 1565, and in 1586 admitted bachelor of music at Oxford, and doctor at Cambridge. He possessed remarkable skill and power, and filled the offices of organist in the Queen's chapel and professor of music in Gresham college. He died in the year 1615. The memoir of him may be consulted in Chalmers.

EMBLEM, p. 189.—To the very learned FRANCIS RAPHELENG, famous at the siege of Antwerp.

Essay iii. p. 269.

A notice of Rapheleng has been given in connection with Plantin in a former part of this work. We shall therefore simply confirm the truth of Whitney's testimony to the internal treachery in Antwerp, at the famous siege of 1585, by an extract from Schiller's history, "Die Regierung dieser Stadt war in allzuviele Hände vortheilt, und der stürmischen Menge ein viel zu grossen Antheil daran gegeben, als dasz man mit Ruhe hätte überlegen mit Einsiecht wählen und mit Festigkeit ausführen können." "The government of this town was shared among too many hands, and too strongly influenced by a disorderly populace to allow any one to consider with calmness, to decide with judgment, or to execute with fairness." As we have observed Plantin retired to Leyden during the siege of Antwerp, but Rapheleng remained, and won at least the admiration of Whitney by his conduct.

* George Bull, bishop of St. David's, born March 25th 1634, and so celebrated in the controversy on the Trinity, was also a native of the same county. "He was," says Fosbrooke, "descended from an ancient and genteel family, seated at Shapwich."

Fosbrooke's Gloucester, p. 229.

EMBLEM, p. 191.—To my Nephew, RO. BORRON.

The Introductory Dissertation shows that Ro. Borron was one of the "prety Boyes" of Whitney's sister Ann. The name belongs to Cheshire, but is not met with in the county histories. Ch. ii. Sect. ii. p. xlvii.

EMBLEM, p. 193.—To the honorable Gentleman Sir WILLIAM RVSSELL Knight.

Sir William Russell, from whom the dukes of Bedford are descended, was the fourth son of Francis Russell, the first earl of Bedford, whom Henry VIII. favoured, and Mary sent ambassador to Spain to conduct king Philip to England. He was educated with his brothers at Magdalen college Oxford, "at the feet," it is said, "of that excellent divine Dr. Humphreys." From travels through France, Germany, Hungary and Italy he returned, "not merely accomplished in languages and improved in his address and range of knowledge, but uninjured by the affectation of foreign fashions, and uncorrupted in his moral and religious principles." His first campaign was served with reputation in the Netherlands, where he obtained the honour of knighthood. In 1583 he married Elizabeth, the daughter and heiress of sir Henry Long of Cambridgeshire. Wiffen's House of Russell, vol. i. p. 506.

Again in the Netherlands he served under Leicester, and a letter from the captain-general to Walsingham thus testifies to his character: "This gentleman is worthy to be cherished, for he is a rare man of courage and government: it were pitty but he should be encouraged in this service, where he is like to learne that knowledge which three yeres perhaps in other places wold not yeld to him. In few words, there canot be to much good said of him." Leicester Correspondence, p. 225.

He was afterwards, in 1594, lord-deputy of Ireland. In 1602, a few months only before her death, he was visited by queen Elizabeth at Chiswick; and on the 21st July 1603 he was created by James I. baron Russell of Thornhaugh. He died in 1613, soon after prince Henry. There is a portrait of him at Woburn abbey. His brother Edward, earl of Bedford, was succeeded in his style and honours by Francis, "the only son of the heroic William, baron of Thornhaugh," and Francis was the father of lord William Russell, beheaded in 1683. Thomas Newton, a Cheshire poet, contemporary with Whit-

EMBLEM, p. 194.—To the honorable Sir JOHN NORRIS Knight, Lord president of Munster in Irelande, and Colonell Generall of the English infanterie, in the lowe countries.

Briefly are his character and services sketched by the editor of Sidney and Languet's Correspondence: "Sir John Norris, second son of Henry, first lord Norris, an excellent soldier, who had served under Coligny in France and Essex in Ireland. He was continually employed on foreign service, and was Commander in Chief of the English forces sent afterwards to relieve Antwerp, and still later of the troops sent by Elizabeth to assist Henry IV. in Bretagne."

London, 1845, p. 169.

So brave a leader deserves for himself as well as his ancestry more than this passing notice. He was descended from that Henry Norris, groom of the bedchamber, present at the private marriage of Henry VIII. with Anne Boleyn. The absurd jealousy of the king charged him and four others with familiarities with the queen; but when pardon was offered on condition of confessing to the supposed truth of the charge, he answered with utmost honour of mind, "and as it became the progenitor of so many valiant heroes, that in his conscience he thought her guiltless of the objected crime, and that he had rather undergo a thousand deaths than betray the innocent."*

Pict. Hist Eng. vol. iii. p. 392.

The portrait of sir John Norris is at Knole, and his character is painted by Fuller with great truth and fervour: "He was a most accomplished general, both for a charge, which is the sword, and a retreat, which is the shield, of war. By the latter he purchased to himself immortal praise, when in France he brought off a small handful of English from a great armful of enemies; fighting, as he retreated, and retreating as he fought; so that always his rear affronted the enemy; a retreat worth ten victories got by surprise, which speak rather the fortune than either the valour or discretion of a general.

"He was afterwards sent over with a great command into Ireland, where his success neither answered his own care, nor others' expectations. Indeed hitherto Sir John had fought with right-handed enemies in France and the Netherlands; who was now to fight with left-handed foes, for so may the wild Irish well be termed (so that this great master of defence was now to seek a new guard), who could lie on the coldest earth, swim through the deepest water, run over what was neither earth nor water, I mean bogs and marshes. He found it far harder to find out than to fight his enemies, they so secured themselves in fastnesses. Supplies, sown thick in promises, came up thin in performances, so slowly were succours sent to him.

"At last a great lord was made lieutenant of Ireland, of an opposite party to Sir John; there being animosities in the court of queen Elizabeth (as well as of later princes), though her general good success rendered them the less to the public notice of posterity. It grieved Sir John to the heart, to see one of an opposite faction should be brought over his head, insomuch that some conceive his working soul broke the cask of his body, as wanting a vent for his grief and anger; for, going up into his chamber, at the first hearing of the news, he suddenly died, anno Domini 1597."

So burst the mighty heart that could not brook undeserved disfavour from his queen.

A writer of that day, on "The Gouernment of Ireland vnder the Honorable Ivst and wise Gouernour Sir John Perrot Knight &c. beginning 1584 and ending 1588," speaks of "Generall Norreys Lord President of Mounster &c." as "braue hearted Norreys," "neuer enough praysed Norreys;" and thus is Spenser's eulogium justified: London, sm. 4to, 1626, pp. 19 and 22. EMBLEM, p. 199.—To THOMAS WILBRAHAM Esquier.

History of Cheshire, vol. iii. p. 196.

"Sir Richard Wilburgham, or Wilbraham," says Ormerod, "the earliest known ancestor of the family, is supposed to have derived his name from the manor of Wilbraham in Cambridgeshire, where a family, bearing the local name, was settled about the time of Henry II."

Thomas Wilbraham, or Wilbram, of Woodhey, near Nantwich, was sheriff of Cheshire in 1585, the year of the dedication of Whitney's emblems. He ranked third in the list of the gentry of his hundred, and appears well to have deserved the respect universally accorded to him by his contemporaries. William Webbe, who knew him intimately, pays a warm tribute to his worth in the Itinerary of the Hundred of Namptwiche:

King's Vale Royal, p. 57.

King's Vale Royal, p. 73.

"And so we come to Faddiley, another member, or rather entire Lordship of it self, divided between the houses of Peever and Handford; and hereunto lyeth adjoyning the Demain and Hall of Woodhey, which as it was the first place where my feet had some rest after the variable courses of my youth, so I could here long dwell upon the remembrances of that ever worthy honoured owner of it, and of me his most unworthy servant, Thomas Wilbraham Esquire, if even here my Ink were not forced to give place to the tears that fall from my eyes. But what need I think upon the commending of him, the world takes knowledge of his worth. The God whom he served is the God of his Seed, the blessing of Heaven is upon his house, and so I hope and pray it may long continue."

Need we wonder, since Geffrey Whitney was born in the same parish of Acton in which Woodhey is situated, that he should make its owner the model of the English gentleman,

"Whose daily study is, your country to adorne,
And for to keepe a worthie house, in place where you weare borne."

But alas! of that Cheshire-renowned Woodhey, except the extensive stabling, and the garden wall and the façade of the chapel, not a brick remains. The entire structure has been cast down and removed. The green sward, in this very spring of 1865 as beautiful as the rich-hued emerald, alone is spread over the foundations of hall and bower; yet still out of that green sward springs the remembrance of one,

"Whose gate, was open to his frende: and purce, vnto the poor." *

And at the distance of about two centuries another of our great Cheshire writers speaks almost as lovingly as did Whitney and Webb, the one of his neighbour, the other of his "old master:" "The memory of private worth seldom survives the contemporaries of its possessors, but this is not the case with the Wilbrahams of Woodhey. Wherever it is possible to glance beyond genealogical deductions, and obtain a knowledge of the individual representatives of the family, they appear to have been graced with every social virtue that could render rank endearing to their equals, and venerated by their dependants, and their family is rarely noticed in the Cheshire collections, without evident expressions of respect and affection." Ormerod, vol. iii. p. 198.

Thomas Wilbraham's first wife was Frances, daughter of one sir Hugh Cholmondeley, and sister of the other. His second wife was Mary, eldest daughter and coheiress of Peter Warburton esq. of Arley, Cheshire. From the first marriage were born his heir sir Richard Wilbraham of Woodhey bart., and among other daughters Dorothy, who was married to sir John Done of Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii. p. 136; vol. iii. pp. 196-199.

Thomas Wilbraham died in 1610 at his seat of Tilston Fearnall, in Edisbury hundred, and his numerous estates descended in his family in a direct line until, in 1692, a coheiress conveyed them to her husband, Lionel Tollemache earl of Dysart, in whose family they still remain, the present owner being John Tollemache esq. of Peckforton castle.

Gent. Magazine, 1821, p. i. pp. 275 279.

Like the name Mainwaring, this name Tollemache sets all rules of orthography at defiance. It is Talmash, Tollmash, Tallemache, Tollemache, and in the Domesday book Toedmag. The family possessed lands at Bentley in Suffolk long before the Norman conquest, and there, until very lately, was to be seen in the old manor house the following inscription:

> "When William the Conqueror reign'd with great fame > Bentley was my seat and Tollemache was my name."

EMBLEM, p. 200.—To RICHARD COTTON Esquier.

For the account of the Cotton family refer back to p. 333. The device of the bee-hive is traceable to Horapollo or to Alciatus, from the latter of whom we present the emblem as given in the edition of 1551. Combermere is mentioned in Whitney's stanzas, and is represented in its old form in one of the illustrations.

EMBLEM, p. 203.—To RICHARD DRAKE Esquier, in praise of Sir FRANCIS DRAKE Knight.

A manuscript note to Mr. Swinnerton's copy of Whitney's emblems supplies the following information: "This is the Crest of the Drake's family, viz.: a Ship under reeff drawn round a Globe with a Cable Rope by an hand out of the Clouds. It shou'd have this motto over it, Auxilio divino, & under it, Sic parvis magna." Also, "Sir F. Drake after his great voyage took for his device the Globe of the world with this motto, Tu primus circumdedisti me. But not excluding his former motto, 'Divino Auxilio.'" Prince's Worthies of Devon, p. 240 and 245.

This voyage round the world was accomplished between the 15th of November 1577, when Plymouth was left, and the 26th of September 1580, when Plymouth harbour again was entered. An account of the voyage was published by the nephew of the circumnavigator, with the significant title, "THE WORLD ENCOMPASSED," and doubtless gave origin to Whitney's device and stanzas. The preface declares that the work itself was compiled "out of the notes of Master Francis Fletcher, Preacher in this employment, and divers others his fellows in the same: Offered now, at last, to publique view, both for the honour of the actor, but especially for the stirring up of heroick spirits to benefit their countrie and eternize their names by like noble attempts."

Whitney's stanzas and some of the sentiments and expressions in "The World Encompassed" are in close accord. Thus the narrator of the voyage declares: "We safely, with joyful minds and thankful hearts to God, arrived at Plimouth, the place of our first setting forth, after we had spent two years ten months and some odd days besides, in seeing the wonders of the Lord in the deep, in discerning so many admirable things, in going through with so many strange adventures, in escaping out of so many dangers, and overcoming so many difficulties in this our encompassing of this nether globe, and passing round about the world which we have related."

> "To the sole worker of great things,
> To the sole governor of the whole world,
> To the sole preserver of his saints,
> To God alone be ever glory."

The Richard Drake named by Whitney was a cousin of sir Francis the navigator, being the brother of sir Bernard Drake, who was knighted in 1585. Richard was born in 1534, and was equery to queen Elizabeth. The Cheshire Drakes of Malpas and Shardeloes "are descended from Richard Drake of Esher in Surrey, a younger son of the ancient family of Drake of Ash in Devonshire." Emblems, p. 203. Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii. p. 382.

Prince's Worthies of Devon, Ed. 1701, p. 245.

There is an anecdote of sir Bernard and sir Francis Drake, which may find a not inappropriate place in connection with Whitney's adoption of the circumnavigator's badge and device. Sir Bernard's crest was a naked arm grasping a sword, which sir Francis had unduly assumed. A quarrel on the subject arose between them, and was carried to such a height that sir Bernard boxed the ears of sir Francis within the verge itself of the royal court. "The displeasure of the queen was shown in a grant of a crest to Sir Francis, wherein the coat of the Ash family was suspended inverted in the rigging of a ship." "Unto all which sir Bernard coolly replied, that though her majesty could give a nobler, yet she could not give him an ancienter coat than his." The coat in question is a dragon, or as it called in heraldry a wyvern, which with the battle axe is also borne by the Drakes of Malpas in Cheshire. The family name therefore is not from drake, a male bird, but from draco, a dragon. The contrary supposition however is made in the epigram, written in 1581, on occasion of queen Elizabeth going on board "the Golden Hind," at Deptford, and there knighting the now famous captain:

> "O Nature, to old England still > Continue these mistakes,
> Give us for all our Kings such Queens,
> And for our Dux such Drakes."

Hayman (Epigrams, published in 1628) takes the other derivation and avers,

> "Drake like a dragon through the world did flie,
> And every coast thereof he did descrie;
> Should envious men be dumbe the spheres will shew,
> And the two poles, his journey which they saw,
> Beyond Cades pillars far he steered his way,
> Great Hercules ashore, but Drake by sea."

Of course Drake's glories were in his own time sung in Latin as well as in English. Our Cheshire poet, Thomas Newton, in 1589, published sixty-one Latin verses addressed to John Ælmer, bishop of London, "concerning the return of the magnanimous knight Francis Drake after his three years' voyage;" and H. Holland has some elegiacs to his memory. Camden's Annals and Stowe's Chronicle give accounts of his exploits: "RICHARD

Thomas Fuller in his "Holy State" wrote his life at large; Dr. Johnson compiled that life for the Gentleman's Magazine; and passing by other lives of the circumnavigator, it will be sufficient to refer to the long biography in Betham's Baronetage, and to "The Life, Voyages and Exploits of Admiral Sir Francis Drake, Knt. &c., by John Barrow Esq." Portraits of the admiral exist at Knole, the seat of earl Amherst, and at Knowsley, the equally well-known seat of the earl of Derby. Among the "penny sights and exhibitions in the reign of James I." was the good ship "The Golden Hind," in which the encompassing of the world was performed, and which for a long time was preserved at Deptford as an object of admiration. A portion of this ship was made into a chair for the Bodleian library, to which in 1662 Cowley attached some verses, and a friend, George E. Thorley esq. of Wadham college, informs me the heart of oak is still in its sanctuary, "with Cowley's stanzas attached, but the metal plate* on which the stanzas are engraved is worn almost smooth by age." The astrolabe which Drake used came into the possession of Bigsby, the author of

* Cowley's verses in fact are undecipherable, but were engraved "in an old-fashioned sort of italic hand, with a good many flourishes and capital letters." They are thus given in a Life of Drake:

And match'd in race the chariot of the Sun;
This Pythagorean Ship (for it may claim Without presumption, so deserv'd a name)
By knowledge once, and transformation now,

"The Triumph of Drake," and the walking cane, "a bamboo, discoloured by time, 2 feet 10 inches long, with an ivory head and a hole in it," remained in the possession of Drake's family from 1581 to 1821, or 240 years, and was then given to Captain William Henry Smith, R.N.

Penny Cyclopædia.

Sir Francis Drake, the eldest of twelve sons of a poor yeoman, was born on the banks of the Tavy in Devonshire in 1545, and died at sea in 1595. His body was buried in the ocean, and one of his contemporaries wrote of the funeral the rough expressive lines:

"The waves became his winding sheet
The waters were his tomb;
But for his fame the ocean sea
Was not sufficient room."

EMBLEM, p. 204.—To ARTHVRE BOVRCHIER Esquier.

This was the author of the commendatory verses "To the Reader" prefixed to the emblems, and ending with the lines:

"Giue WHITNEY then thy good report, since hee deserues the same:
Lest that the wise that see thee coye, thy follie iustly blame."

But it is uncertain to what family he belonged. The name was one of renown, for Thomas Bourchier, cardinal-archbishop of Canterbury, is said to have introduced printing into England, and John Bourchier, who was chancellor of the exchequer to Henry VIII., translated La Chronique of Froissart.

Biogr. Univ. vol v. p. 354.

Arthur Bourchier published a fable of Æsop versified, and is the writer of a poem which appeared in the edition of The Paradise of Dayntie Deuises in 1600. It is entitled "Golden Precepts," of which the following are two of the stanzas:

Farr's Select Poetry of Elizabeth's reign, vol. i. p. xxv.; vol ii. p. 297.

"Perhaps you thinke me bolde
That dare presume to teach,
As one that runs beyond his race,
And rowes beyond his reach,
Sometime the blind doo goe,
Where perfect sights do fall;
The simple may sometimes instruct
The wisest heads of all."

EMBLEM, p. 205.—To ARTHVRE STARKEY Esquier.

We may naturally look for some of the persons to whom Whitney devotes his power of song in the neighbourhood where he was himself born and brought up. The Starkeys, bearing for their crest a stork, as a Cheshire family were settled at Stretton in Budworth at least as early as the reign of Henry II. A.D. 1154, and at Over about 1287, and on April 4th 1382, under the seal Galfridi De Warburton, a release was granted to Thomas Starkey of Stretton. Two Starkeys in Richard II.'s reign married two coheiresses of the Oultons of Oulton and Wrenbury; of the one was descended sir Humphrey Starkey, chief baron of the exchequer, and members of this family may be traced to 1728; of the other are derived the Starkeys of Wrenbury, who became extinct in 1803.

Sir P. Leycester, p. 355.

The Lysons, pp. 391 and 719.

Now Wrenbury is very near to the place of Whitney's birth, and to Audlem where he went to school. Contemporary with him was Arthur Starkey of Wrenbury, who was buried there in October 1622. His father Thomas Starkey died in 1566, and his mother was Katherine, daughter of sir Richard Mainwaring of Ightfield in Shropshire. In the three generations preceding his father the Starkeys of Wrenbury became allied with the Egertons of Oulton, the Mainwarings of Peover, and the Warburtons of Arley.

EMBLEM, p. 206.—To JAN DOVSA, son of the very noble JAN DOVSA, lord of Noortwijck.

Janus Dousa, or John Vanderdoes the elder, and John Vanderdoes the younger, were among the most celebrated of the literary men of Holland in an age which abounded in famous Dutchmen. John Vanderdoes the younger, born January 16th 1571, and dying 21st December 1598, was the most renowned of four brothers — himself, George, Francis and Theodore. George was an accomplished linguist, and undertook a journey to Constantinople, of which he published an account, and added to it various ancient inscriptions from different parts of Greece. Francis, like his eldest brother, was a poet and a man of considerable learning; and Theodore, born in 1580 and dying in 1663, a man of knightly rank and judge of the supreme court, was recognised among the Latin poets of his country, and known also for his edition of Logotheta's Chronicon and other learned works. It was however John Dousa the younger, on whose untimely death Joseph Scaliger composed a long poem, an "Epicedium" or funeral dirge, and to whose memory, in modern times, Mattby's Sigenbeek has presented a warm "Laudatio," or offering of praise.

Leyden, 1812.

At the time when Whitney dedicated this emblem to him he had not reached his fourteenth year, but his extraordinary acquirements at a very early age gave him a place among those who were remarkable for learning even in their childhood. The Latin stanzas bearing the name "JANVS DOVSA à Noortwijck" prefixed to the emblems, and attributed to the father, were really the composition of the son.* In his sixteenth year he wrote commentaries on Plautus, and at the age of nineteen he had made annotations on several learned works. He was in fact even then a poet, critic, mathematician and philosopher. His moral character was not less excellent than his intellectual faculties were admirable. He had been preceptor to Henry Frederic prince of Orange, and was cut off in his twenty-sixth year, leaving a name still fondly remembered in his native land, and highly estimated in the annals of learning.

Intr. Dissert. p. xxvii.

Considering his youth Whitney's emblem to him is very appropriate. It represents a man gathering grapes, treading the unripe bunches under his feet, but presenting the ripe fruit to a woman standing by his side. In the distance appears the bow of promise and Iris, the messenger of the gods, seated in expectation at its feet.

In the university library of Leyden is a curious relic, regarded as having belonged to John Dousa from his fourth year to his death in 1598, and then continued by some other member of the family down to February 14th 1628. It is a quarto manuscript, bearing on the binding the date 1575, with borders to the pages of which more than one-half are not written on. Among the entries one is, "A memorial relating to the marriage of Ysbrandt van der Does, when he married, whom he married, and the birth of his children by his wife."

A good account of John Dousa the son, is given in Peerlkamp's

* As appears in the edition of the poems of John Dousa, the son, "JANI DOUSAE FILII POEMATA" Roterodami CIↃ IↃCCIV. 8vo pp. 212; where, at p. 205, occur these very stanzas, "In Gulfridi Whitnei Emblemata nomine Patris."

EMBLEM, p. 207.— To M. WILLIAM HAREBROWNE, at Constantinople.

In connection with the county of Norfolk, and with Yarmouth, one of its towns, we find this name variously written, as Harborne, Harbrown, Hareborne, Harbrowne, Harbourne, but all referring to persons of the same family. Were there not numberless instances of similar variations we should doubt whether Whitney's "William Harebrowne at Constantinople" was Hakluyt's "master William Hareborne," "her maiesties Ambassadour or Agent, in the partes of Turkie" from 1582 to 1588. Manship's History of Great Yarmouth however removes all uncertainty, for that work says expressly, "William Harborne of Mundham was sent Ambassador by Queen Elizabeth to the Grand Seignior in 1582."* The name of this William Hareborne is among the names of those who joined in the pic-nic to Scratby island August 2nd 1580. Hakluyt, vol. ii. pp. 157 and 289. Palmer's Edition, vol. ii. p. 283.

Sir Anthony Harborne, a knight in the army of Edward III., is regarded as the ancestor of the Yarmouth family of this name, and the arms which he bore were granted in 1582 to "William Harborne of Yarmouth and London, son of William Harborne of Yarmouth, who married Joan Piers," cousin of John, archbishop of York. Palmer's Manship, vol. ii. p. 283.

William Harebrowne, the father, was one of the bailiffs of Yarmouth in 1556, and in 1571 and 1572, and one of the burgesses in parliament in 1575. William Harebrowne the son is first mentioned in 1580 and 1582. Palmer's Manship, vol. i. pp. 36, 73 and 186; vol. ii. pp. 199 and 302.

The revival of the interrupted trade of England with the Levant is attributed "to the speciall industrie of the worshipfull and worthy Citizens, Sir Edward Osborne, Knight, M. Richard Staper, and M. William Hareborne." In the "Queenes Commission under her great seale" it is recited, "that wee thinking well, and hauing good confidence in the singular trustinesse, obedience, wisedome, and disposition of our welbeloued seruante Hakluyt, vol. ii. p. 158.

* "His great-grand-daughter married Edward Ward of Bexley. She was created a baroness in 1660. This was an elder branch of the family of Lord Ward."

William Hareborne, one of the Esquiers of our body, towards vs, and our seruices, doe by these presents, make, ordaine and constitute him our true and vndoubted Orator, Messenger, Deputie, and Agent." The sovereign to whom Harebrowne was accredited was "the most renowned, and most inuincible Prince Zuldan Murad Can," the same with Amurath III., who reigned from 1575 to 1595.

Hakluyt, vol. ii. p. 165.

"The voyage of the Susan of London to Constantinople, wherein the worshipfull M. William Harborne was sent first Ambassadour vnto Sultan Murad Can, the great Turke," is an account well worth the reading. The ship left Blackwall the 14th of November 1582, and arrived at Constantinople on the 29th of March 1583, and on "the 11 day of April came to the Key of the Custom house."

From his mansion, "Rapamat in Pera," Mr. Harebrowne dates several letters and consular documents. He remained in charge of English trade and English interests until his return "from Constantinople ouerland to London, 1588." In a brief but interesting narrative of his journey we are told that he left the city of the sultan "with thirty persons of his suit and family" the 3rd August 1588, passing through Romania, Wallachia and Moldavia, and by the middle of September entering Poland, with the chancellor of which he had an interview on the 27th of September. The exact date of his arrival in England is not noted down, but he was at Hamburg the 19th of November, "and at Stoad the ninth of December."

Blomefield, vol. i. p. 339.

It appears that soon after his return, 16th September 1589, he was married to Elizabeth Drury of Besthorp, in Norfolk. He now joined with sir Edward Osborne knt. and others in setting open "a trade of merchandize and trafficke into the landes, Ilandes, Dominions and territories of the great Turke," and is several times named in "the second letters Patents graunted by the Queenes Maiestie to the Right worshipfull companie of the English Marchants for the Leuant, the seventh of Januarie 1592."

Pict. Hist. England, bk. vi. c. iv. vol. iii. p. 790.

The Turkey company was incorporated in 1581, and it was to promote its interests chiefly that Mr. Harebrowne had been sent to Constantinople; and by that same company various attempts were made to open a direct English trade with India, until on the 22nd of September 1599 about a hundred of the merchants of London united themselves into an association known as "The Governor and Company of the Merchants of London trading into the East Indies."

EMBLEM, p. 208. — To M. THOMAS WHETELEY.

The name Whitley, or Wheteley, exists among Cheshire names;* but no identification of Thomas Wheteley with any family in the county has been made. There was a puritan vicar of Banbury in Oxfordshire, William Whateley, during the greater part of the reign of James I.; and an interesting account of him, with a portrait, is given in Clarke's Marrow of Ecclesiastical History. In 1570 the Domestic Series of State Papers, p. 381, mentions a Mr. Wheteley of Norwich as one who might "well be charged with the whole or part of the loan assessed on him by Privy Seal." This may have been Mr. Thomas Wheteley, or of his family.

EMBLEM, p. 212. — To the very accomplished and very celebrated physicians, JOHN, JAMES and LANCELOT BROWNE.

Doubtless a most celebrated name among physicians; but Benjamin Hutchinson's Biographia Medici, or Lives and Writings of the most eminent Medical Characters &c. from earliest account of time to the present period, contains no mention of John, James and Lancelot. Sir Thomas Browne, the author of Religio Medici, though born in London in 1605,† was of a family long settled at Upton, near Chester, and if the three physicians whom Whitney distinguishes were not brothers, one or two of them might have been of the same family; but as to Lancelot Browne, the Coopers decide that he was a native of York, "matriculated as a pensioner of St. John's college in May 1559, proceeded B.A. 1562-3, and commenced M.A. 1566." In 1570 he received his licence to practise physic, was created M.D. in 1576, and "on 10 June 1584 was admitted a fellow of the college of physicians."

The emblems which Whitney assigns to Æsculapius are very correct. The sanctuary of the god, at Epidaurus, "contained a magnificent statue of ivory and gold, the work of Thrasymedes, in which he was represented as a handsome and manly figure, resembling that of Zeus. He was seated on a throne, holding in one hand a staff, and with the other resting upon the head of a dragon (serpent) and by his side lay a dog." A cock was sacrificed to him by those who had experienced healing.

EMBLEM, p. 213.—To the very famous JUSTUS LIPSIUS, adorned with all the glory of learning and worth.

Poemata, pp. 49-203,

About the time that Whitney penned this dedication, the youthful Latinist John Dousa had strung together above a dozen elegies, odes and juvenile epigrams on the illness, or the garden, or the image, or the various praises of Justus Lipsius, who then filled a very large space in the affection and admiration of literary men. The emblem assigned to him, taken from Beza's

Plate LIX.

Portraits &c., represents a dog barking at the moon and stars, and figures in the dog those who attacked the great luminary of the university of Leyden. In learning indeed he had few, if any, equals,—it was both extensive and profound; and at this date (1586) he was at the very height of his reputation, not having manifested the inordinate vanity, mixed with narrowness of mind, which in 1591 induced him to dedicate a silver pen to the Virgin of Hall in a copy of verses filled with his own praises. In spite however of his errors and weaknesses he must be regarded as a man of great literary powers.

Lipsius was born at Isch near Brussels 18th October 1547, and died at Louvain 24th March 1607. His school learning was acquired at Brussels, Aeth and the Jesuits' college of Cologne: in 1567 he went to Rome and then passed to Louvain and Vienna. Soon after, in 1572, he accepted the professorship of history in the Lutheran university of Jena, and acknowledged the Lutheran faith. In 1574 he was again a Roman Catholic in the retirement of his native place, but about 1577 he filled with great renown the chair of history at Leyden, where for thirteen years his external religion was Calvinistic. At the end of this period he returned to Louvain, and publicly abjured the Protestant religion. So many changes of course exposed him to the charges of inconsistency and want of conscientiousness, and doubtless he is to be censured for teaching in a Protestant college that no state ought to allow a plurality of religions, and for manifesting such extreme credulity when he re-adopted the profession of his youth. He was however a great scholar and a sound critic, as his works testify.*

An entire edition of his works was published at the Plantin press in Antwerp, four vols. in folio, in 1637, and justifies Oettinger in naming him "philologue belge du premier ordre." For a fuller account of his life and writings the reader may consult Chalmers's Gen. Biog. Dict. vol. xx. pp. 314-319, and Biographie Universelle, vol. xxiv. pp. 551-557. Bib. Biog. p. 376.

Emblem, p. 217.—To M. Elcocke, Preacher.

At Poole, a township in the parish of Acton, about two and a quarter miles N.N.W. from Nantwich, a family of the name of Elcocke possessed the estate of White Poole in the reign of Edward VI., and resided there for more than two centuries and a half, until the death of Mrs. Ann Elcocke in 1812, when under her will the property passed to her nephew William Massey, and is now enjoyed by Francis Elcock Massey esq.

The Lysons, pp. 381, 403 and 475.

The Elcockes were originally of Stockport. Alexander Elcocke, who died November 15th 1550, left four sons, of whom the eldest, Francis, died October 14th 1591, and the fourth son was named Thomas. A Thomas Elcocke occurs as rector of Barthomley in Cheshire before 1605, and this is the Mr. Elcocke, preacher, whom Whitney commemorates.

Ormerod, vol. iii. pp. 188 and 164. Lanc. MSS. vol. xii.

"Preacher," says the Rev. Canon Raines in a communication with which he favoured me, "would be the highest style of commendation and address in an age when there were very few of the sacred calling able to preach." He also supplies me with the following facts: "1576-7, March 24. Mr. Thomas Elcocke presented to the Rectory of Barthomley by Robert Fullerhurst of Crewe on the death of Robert Kinsey, Clerk, the last Parson. He afterwards gave bond to the Bishop of Chester on being instituted." Elcocke's ministry at Barthomley probably terminated about 1617.

In that age, as we learn from Shakespeare's sir Hugh Evans, it was not unusual to give the title sir to clergymen who had not proceeded to the Master of Arts' degree. The Rev. Edward Hinchliffe names Thomas Elcocke, clericus, but records a little bit of gossip respecting him, the very year in which Whitney's emblem is dedicated to him, "1586." In this year the parishioners of Barthomley preferred numerous complaints against their parson, sir Thomas Elcocke (inter alia), "That he greatly abused his Parishioners, and patron of the church, and that his curate, sir Robert Andrew, was a brawler and a drunkard, and was so drunk returning from Nantwich that had it not been for Robert Lant and Robert Yardley drawing him out of the water, he had been in danger of his life." The tenor of the narrative shows that if there was truth there was no less malice in some of the witnesses.

EMBLEM, p. 219. — "In amore tormentum," In love torment.

The gnats round the candle are favourites with the emblem writers. Whitney borrows the device from Corrozet's Hecatomgraphie, printed at Paris in 1540, and it occurs also in Le Sententiose Imprese of Symeoni and Giovio; but neither of these writers gives more than a stanza of four lines, and Whitney, according to his wont, extends the subject thirty lines, with many examples by way of warning to the inexperienced.

Plate XXXII.

Essay i. p. 241.

The device and the Italian motto are both claimed by Symeoni as his own invention, for he says, "Vn gentilhomme mien amy estant amoureax, me pria de luy trouuer vne deuise, pourquoy ie luy feis pourtraire vn Papillon à l'entovr d' vne chandelle allumée auec ces paroles: "COSI VIVO PIACER CONDVCE A MORTE."

EMBLEM, p. 222. — To MR. RAWLINS, Preacher.

As there is no Christian name added, and there were in Mary's and Elizabeth's reigns many preachers of the name of Rawlins, or Rawlinges, we have some license in considering whom Whitney intended. "A brief discours off the troubles begonne at Franckford in Germany Anno Domini 1554; abowte the Booke off common prayer and ceremonies," published in 1575, contains the names "off such as subscribed" to "the Discipline reformed and confirmed by the authorities off the churche and Magistrate," and among the names is William Raulinges, elsewhere in the same book spelt Rawlinges. The date of the subscription is about 1557.

Erkinald Rawlins and Dorothy his wife, Mr. Raines informs me, were friends of Bradford the martyr, and there is an interesting letter from Bradford addressed to them, and also a letter from Rawlins to Bradford, dated Antwerp, July 31st 1554. The two Rawlins and others were sent to the Tower by queen Mary 18th March 1555-6.

Parker Society, vol. i. pp. 221 and 97.

Martyn's Diary, p. 102.

Among the vicars of St. Peter, Chester, is entered, "1570 January 9, Edward Rawlins," who remained vicar unto March 14th 1573, when he resigned; and in the "Typographical Antiquities of Joseph Ames" is mentioned "1591 R. Rawlins consort of the creatures with the creator, and with themselves."

Ormerod, vol. i. p. 261.

Edit. 1749, p. 1358.

But not one of these is the Rawlins of Whitney's emblem; that was a Norfolk friend of the poet's, John Rawlyns, who on the 8th March 1581 was presented by the earl of Sussex and Henry Gurney esq. to the united rectory of Atleburgh. In Mortimer's chapel against the east wall of the church is or was a mural monument, with the Rawlins' arms, and beginning Blomefield, vol. i. pp. 355 and 237.

"Fui Johannes Rawlyns, Northamptoniensis."

From the inscription we learn that he was born at Paston, and educated at Spalding in Lincolnshire; that he was a scholar of St. John's college, Cambridge, and that he was rector of Atleburgh for thirty-three years, dying May 2nd 1614, in the 67th year of his age.

"Coelum mihi iam Domicilium."

His eulogy is set forth in two elegiac stanzas, it being premised that he had only one wife, by name Mary, dear, prudent, frugal, faithful, buried here beside him, and that he left four sons and two daughters, well brought up:

"If, Reader, thou seekest why this stone should speak,
Here are entombed the vast riches of his genius;
The praises of Rawlings living, living tongues did praise,
His duties of life discharged, the rocks cannot be silent."

EMBLEM, p. 222. — To MR. STEEVENSON, Preacher.

There was a Mr. William Stevenson, prebendary of Durham, 1561–1575, a friend of bishop Pilkington; whether he left a son also a preacher is not known, but himself died in 1575. I do not find the name either in the Athenæ Oxonienses or the Athenæ Cantabrigienses, at the time in question, 1586. Ormerod's Cheshire is silent, and so is Blomefield's Norfolk.

The device from Hadrian Junius, edition 1564, is noteworthy for the spirited execution of it; the rats indeed are triumphant, and the cats very subdued. To the beautiful border there is nothing superior in the whole compass of emblem literature. Note also the border of the plates XXVI*b*, XXVI*c*, and XXVI*d*. These, as we have before remarked, p. 250, are the sources of the borders for Whitney's devices. Plate XXVI*a*.

EMBLEM, p. 223. — To MR. KNEWSTVB, Preacher.

Were Whitney addicted to satire, we might conjecture that both the device and the stanzas were an indirect reproof of the preacher whom he names. This was John Knewstub, B.D., at the time of the emblems being published chaplain to the earl of Leicester, and frequently mentioned in the histories of the day. He was born at Kirby Stephen, Westmoreland, in 1540, and probably educated there until he entered at Cambridge. Like many from the north of England he was chosen fellow of St. John's college, and afterwards ranked among its benefactors. During his residence in the university he united with Dr. Andrews and Dr. Chadderton in the observance of weekly meetings for conference upon Scripture. There is "A Sermon preached at Paules Crosse the Fryday before Easter, 1576, by I. Knewstub;" and a work, which passed through several editions, 1577–1600, authorized by the bishop of London, and dedicated "to the Lady Anne, Countesse of Warwick," the wife of Ambrose Dudley; "The LECTVRES of John Knewstub, vpon the twentieth Chapter of Exodus, and certeine other places of Scripture." 4to. Plate V.

On his removing from Cambridge, in 1579, Knewstub became rector at Cockfield in Suffolk, and gained distinction as the leader of the Puritan and Nonconformist clergy in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridge. When the earl of Leicester was sent into the Netherlands, Knewstub accompanied him as chaplain, and a note on a letter from Walsyngham to Leicester, 25th April 1586, narrates the celebration of St. George's day in the earl's court at Utrecht, and informs us "then began prayers and a sermon by master Knewstubs my lords chaplaine, after which my lord proceeded to the offering, first for her majesty and then for himself, &c."

Neale's Puritans, Edit. 1822, vol. ii. p. 15.

In 1603 Knewstub was one of the Puritan divines who took part in the Hampton court conference before James I., and maintained that "rites and ceremonies were at best but indifferent, and therefore doubted, whether the power of the church could bind the conscience without impeaching Christian liberty."

He died May 29th 1624, at the age of 84.*

EMBLEM, p. 224. — To M. ANDREWES, Preacher.

Fain would we make out that this was the celebrated Lancelot Andrews, in succession bishop of Chichester, Ely and Winchester; but as he was only born in 1565, he would be only a student, not a preacher, in 1586. As far as name and locality are concerned, the Andrewes of the emblem may have been in 1586 Elcocke's curate at Barthomley, not far from Nantwich, and whom Hinchliffe names "a brawler and a drunkard," "Sir Robert Andrew." The History of Great Yarmouth however shows very decisively who was Whitney's Andrewes the preacher: In "1585 Mr. Andrews, a learned and godly preacher, was appointed by the corporation, with a salary of £50 a year, and a house was built for his residence." Bartimæus Andrewes was his name, and he was the author of A Catechism with Prayers, 8vo, London, 1591.

Palmer's Manship, vol. ii. p. 151.

This Mr. Andrewes seems to have been a very pains-taking and deserving clergyman, for in 1591 the corporation agreed to give him £50 a year "if he be not put to silence;" but if he were silenced they mark their sense of his merit by still promising to pay him £25 a year. In 1600 they paid him £32 10s. "for his pains and labour, he giving the town a general acquittance."

Notes and Queries, vol. xii. p. 253.

* To those desirous of pursuing this subject the references by C. H. Cooper may be useful: Brook's Lives of the Puritans, vol. ii. p. 308; Strype's Life of Whitgift, pp. 328, 572, 575; Strype's Annals, vol. i. p. 625, vol. ii. p. 608, Append. p. 160, vol. iii. p. 471, Append. p. 188; Page's Supplement to Suffolk Traveller, pp. 9, 35; Peck's Desiderata Curiosa, lib. vi. numb. 8.

EMBLEM, p. 227.—To M. IAMES IONSON.

Previous to 1593 there was a Mr. Hamnet Johnson, merchant of Chester, and a fair tomb existed to another of the same name "untimely deceased, and thus writ upon": King's Vale Royal, p. 48.

> "Here lieth the Body of William Johnson, Merchant; sometime Alderman of this City, who died the 12th day of January Anno Dom. 1607.
> Vivit post funera virtus."

Among the rectors of Church Coppenhall, which is about five miles N.E. from Nantwich, Ormerod places Anthony Johnson, who occupied the rectory from 1583 to 1621. History of Cheshire, vol. iii. p. 176.

Whether James Jonson was of either of these families remains altogether uncertain, but the vicinity of Coppenhall to Nantwich suggests that he may have been allied to Anthony Johnson.

EMBLEM, p. 228.—To M. HOWLTE, Preacher.

The name Holt is of high antiquity in Cheshire. The manor of Wimbersley, or Wimbaldesley, near Middlewich, with Lea hall, belonged to the family of Holt for several generations; and the manor of Sale, once "the property of Geffrey, son of Adam Dutton, ancestor of the Warburtons," was bestowed by him "in year 1187 on two of his gentlemen, Richard Mascie and Thomas Holte," and "their descendants continued to hold it in moities in the reign of Queen Elizabeth." From this family of Holts therefore might be Mr. Howlte the preacher. The Lysons, pp. 485 and 694.

But the name Holt is not unfrequent in Lancashire, and a Mr. William Holte, second son of Robert Holte of Ashworth hall, is mentioned in the 1st of Elizabeth. In 1589 he is described as brother of Holte of Ashworth, a Jesuit, and in league with cardinal Allen and others against queen Elizabeth. It is not however probable that Whitney, himself of puritan leanings, would entitle such a man a preacher. Lanc. MSS. vol. xiv. p. 50.

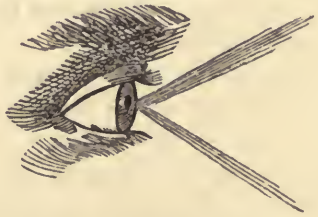
A curious old book, before quoted p. 396, in the library of Mr. Toulmin Smith of Highgate, near London, among the names "off such as subscribed," in 1557 at Francfort, "The Discipline reformed and confirmed by the authorities of the churche and Magistrate," records "John Olde;" not very like indeed to Holte, but opposite is marked in pencil by some one who made Letter, Oct. 23, 1865.

inquiry into the fact the name Howlte, and thus, one of the confessors under Mary's reign, may claim to be Whitney's "Howlte the Preacher" in 1586.

EMBLEM, p. 230.—"Tempus omnia terminat," Time terminates all things.

With the final device of Whitney's emblems we place by way
Plate XXXV. of contrast the device from Coustau to the motto "Le Temps fait tout," Time accomplishes every thing. It is a quaint and curious ditty, that old French of his:

"The man well advised plucks hair after hair
At his leisure from tail of his horse;
Be it good, be it bad, the foolish by force
At one jerk leaves the animal bare.
Time and labour conjoined, together work well;—
All things they bestow, as all people must know
Whom despair never grieves here below;
Time and labour together, they ever excell."



Per cæcum videt omnia punctum.

ADDENDA.

QUESTIONS still remain unconsidered; but here, in the Addenda, only a few of them will be introduced.

INTRODUCTORY DISSERTATION, p. xiv. — "Gerard Leeu." An earlier work from Leeu's press is dated 22nd April 1472, but I have not seen it: the title, as given by M. Bodel Nyenhuis, is, Spiegel der Sassen. Diss. Hist. Jurid. Leyden, 1819, p. 439.

WHITNEY'S AUTOGRAPHS, p. xl. (note †).—Since this note was written, the courtesy of George W. Napier esq. of Alderley Edge, Cheshire, has supplied me with the means of giving a photo-lithograph impression of the title-page of the very book mentioned in Notes and Queries, and of which he has lately become the purchaser; it is Ocland's Battles of the English,* a Latin hexameter poem of about 3420 lines, dedicated "AD ILLVSTRISSIMAM, POTENTISSIMAMQVE PRINCIPEM, D. ELIZABETHAM, ANGLIÆ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Reginam, fidei propugnatricem," and preceded by her arms. A comparison between the autographs on Plate VII. and Plate XLIII*a* will justify the conclusion that they were written by the same hand. Whitney's writing also appears, I think, on Plate XIII. in the words "Soli dei honor et gloria in æua sempiterna. Amen." Plate XLIII*a*. Plate XLIII*b*.

* "The Tenour of the Letters," "from the Court at Greenewich, the 21 of Aprill. 1582," "directed by the Lords of hir highnesse priuie Counsell to her Maiesties high cõmissioners in causes Ecclesiasticall," enjoins, "the publike receyuing and teaching of Ch. Ocklandes Booke in all Grammer and freeschooles within this Realme." The letters are signed by Ambrose Warwicke, Robert Leicester, and others, and assign as a reason that "in common schooles, where diuers heathen Poets are ordinarily read and taught," "the youthe of the realme doth rather receuie infection in manners than aduauncement in vertue." Bound up in the same volume is Ocland's "EIPHNAPXIA," on the peaceful state of England under Elizabeth, a Latin poem of 1096 lines; and Alexander Neville's KETTVS, a history in Latin prose of Kett's insurrection in Norfolk.

Plates XI*a*. and XIII*a*. INTROD. DISSER. pp. xli-xlii.—"Coole Pilate, in the parish of Acton." A drawing of the house which tradition assigns as Whitney's birthplace is presented among the illustrations, and also of the church of the parish of Acton in which "the Mannour of Cole Pilate" is situated. The old portion of the house has most of the characteristics of a Cheshire home of Elizabeth's time, and the tradition therefore possesses some of the elements of authenticity; yet as Whitney writes of the phœnix,

> "And thoughe for truthe, this manie do declare,
> Yet thereunto, I meane not for to sweare."

Note.—The last line, "Soli dei" &c., appears to be in Whitney's own handwriting,—the rest to have been copied upon the roll by his clerk, who certainly was not a perfect Latin grammarian, or he would not have written naves, preservati essent.

A translation of Whitney's "Account" is printed in Palmer's Manship's History of Great Yarmouth, but as the exact designations of the original Latin are not given, nor the order and spelling of the names observed,* I here append another version: Vol. i. p. 105-6.

Furthermore, on the second day of the month of August in the Year (now) present, the Master Bailiffs associated with a worshipfull company as well of knights as of gentlemen and other men of experience, together with certain most prudent and highly discreet Burgesses, A.D. 1580.

* The original has forty-three names: Manship's translation gives forty-five, two additional being inserted—"John Bladded gent.," and "Mr. Henry Manship." The probability is that Whitney's clerk had inadvertently omitted these two names, and that Manship, who wrote his history not later than 1614, knowing of their presence at the corporation's gipseying, therefore placed them on his list. Introd. Diss. p. 52.

crossed over the channel to a certain new island, Three miles distant from the town, lately growing up on the northern part opposite to Scrotbie, And by the constant movements of the winds gathered out of the sand and heaped up. Where all at the same time dined And afterwards played at bowls upon the same, And to the same gave the name of Yermouth Island. And because they hoped that the same in future time would be increased by the constant blowing of the winds, and so be of the greatest help and succour to fishermen, sailors and all persons sailing by the same course, Therefore they girded the higher part of the same with a Hedge by which the sand being retarded, the heap and gathering together of the same might be the sooner accumulated into a huge mass, and by little and little might grow and be strengthened into firm ground, that, by God's favour, in a small space of time, ships, whenever tarrying at the same, might be kept and guarded from the most violent assaults of Tempests, as in a harbour safe from every danger. Of which Island the Length by estimation then contained almost a mile and the breadth about the same.

The names of the knights, esquires, gentlemen, bailiffs, burgesses and sailors may easily be made out from the Latin original, to which readers are referred.

INTROD. DISSER. p. lxxiv. — "τὰ τρία ταῦτα." Faith, Hope and Charity, here symbolized by the cross, the anchor and the dove, were also symbolized, though in a different manner, by Lorenzo the Magnificent. Giovio's Dialogo, pp. 42, 43, as translated by Daniell, gives us the following account: "Iou. I cãnot go beyond the three Diamãts which the great Cosimo did beare, which you see engrauen in the chamber wherein I lye. But to tell you the trueth, although with all diligẽce I haue searched, yet cãnot I find precisely what they signifie, & thereof also doubted Pope Clemẽt, who in his meaner fortune lay also in the selfe same chamber. And trueth it is that he sayd, the Magnifico Lorenzo vsed one of them with greate brauerie, inserting it betweene three feathers of three sundrie colours, greene, white, and red: which betokened three vertues, Faith, Hope and Charitie, appropriate to those three colours: Hope, greene: Faith, white: Charitie, red, with this worde, Semper, belowe it. Which Impresa hath bene vsed of all the succcssors of his house, yea, and of the Pope: who did beare it imbrodered on the vpper garments of the horsmen of his garde, vnder that of the yoke." THE FRONTISPIECE. p. 232.—Armorial Bearings of Andreas Alciatus, Plate XVI. emblazoned in 1546, from the edition of his emblems by Aldus:

"NEVER PROCRASTINATE.
Of Alciat's race the elk the motto bears,
'Procrastination every moment shun.'
The conqueror answered one who longed to know
How he so much in time so short had done;
'Never of will defer;' the elk declares,
That swift as strong his course shall onward go."

ESSAY I., p. 233.—Whitney made a selection from the labours of earlier writers, and especially from those whose works had been imprinted "in the house of Christopher Plantyn."

This statement furnishes the reason why there should be so very many correspondences and resemblances between Whitney and his predecessors for nearly a century in the same art, and yet that absolute identities should be confined to the circle of writers that were patronized at Antwerp and Leyden. Looking at his work, and Pages 3-16. particularly at the "Epistle Dedicatorie" and the address "to the Reader," we can scarcely admit that he was unaware of the Treatises on Devices of Arms and Love, by Giovio, Ruscelli and Dominicho. In the Choice of Emblemes so many counterparts exist, set forth with word, device and stanza, to the descriptions and mottoes of these three Italian writers, that it is only reasonable to infer Whitney's knowledge of them, and unconscious if not direct use of the materials which they supply.

We will therefore, so far as relates to Whitney, trace out some correspondences and resemblances, and the more so because the principles, history and construction of emblems which Giovio's Treatise develops possess high value in themselves, and present many points of interest in connection with emblem art. Besides this plan will afford a suitable opportunity for introducing some of the historical anecdotes with which certain devices and mottoes are accompanied.

For this purpose we take the seven emblems from Whitney, on pages 111, 121, 139*a*, 140, 153*a*, 166 and 195, which correspond in their Plate LX. mottoes or general nature with seven others in Giovio's Dialogo, edition in Roma M.D.LV.*

Emb. p. 111. Whitney's motto, "pietas in patriam," and the device of Scævola's Dialogo, p. 64. hand thrust into the flame, correspond with Giovio's "fortia facere et pati Romanvm est," To do braue deeds and to suffer belongs to a Roman.

* We give the references to the Italian of Giovio, Ed. 1555, and the translation by Daniell, 1585.

This motto was placed by S. Mutio Colonna on the "vpper Armour and Ensignes" of his "companie of an hundred Launces," with the device of "an hande burning in the fire vpon an Aulter of Sacrifice." The allusion is to Mutius Scævola, who burned his hand because it had failed to strike Porsenna dead, — thus expressed by Paradin: "Tel regret & desplaisir reçeut M. Scæuola Rommain, d'auoir failli à occire le Tirant, qui opprimoit sa patrie, que lui mesmes dans vn feu, en voulut punir sa main propre." Devises Héroïqves, fol. 73.

The next motto, "Festina lentè," with its appropriate device of a butterfly held captive by a crab, is expressed in Giovio by the synonymes "propera tarde," Hasten slowly. Giovio takes this as an example of Impresas known to the ancients, and records among others how "Plutarch reporteth that Pompey the great did beare for his Enseigne a Lyŏ with a sword clasped in his claw. We find also in the remaynes of old antiquities many to haue like signification to our moderne Impreses, as appeareth in that of Vespasianus, which was a Dolphin intangled with an Anchore, with this posie: Festina lentè, Make soft speede." Daniell adds to the text of Giovio, "A sentence which Octavianus Augustus was wont often to vse."* Giovio and Symeoni's Sententiose Imprese gives the following Italian version: Emb. p. 121. Dialogo, p. 5. For example, see Whitney, p. 116. Edit. 1562, p. 11.

"Di Cesare Avgvsto
Augusto pria col Granchio & la Farfalla
Fece in oro scolpire il bel concetto,
Quasi dicisse in cosi vario obietta,
Chi bien pensa, & fa tosto, mai non falla." Festina lentè.

"Sic spectanda fides," and gold on the touchstone, find their counterpart in Giovio's "Fides hoc vno, virtvsqve probantur," Fidelity and valour are proved by this one thing; where the allusion is to Fabritio Colonna who took for his Impresa a touchstone, "to importe that his vertue & faith should of al men bee knowne by touch and triall. This did he weare at the cõflict of Rauenna, where his valiant courage was manfully shewen, albeit he was there wounded and taken prisoner." Emb. p. 139*a*. Dialogo, p. 61.

Previous notices at pp. 303, 304 and 364 show that other persons

* The addition to Giovio's text is probably from Symeoni's Devises Héroïqves et Morales, p. 218, edition à Lyon 1561, which is also the source of Paradin's and of Whitney's emblem. We there read of the "bon Prince et Empereur Auguste," that wishing to show that the first reports and informations are not lightly to be believed, "feit frapper entre plusieurs autres en vne sienne medaille d'or vn Papillon et vne Escreuisse, signifiant la vistesse par le Papillon, et par l'Escreuisse, la paresse, lesquelles deux choses font vn temperement necessaire à vn Prince." Plate LXII.

Edit. 1553, fol. 101. also adopted the same device. Paradin, from whom Whitney borrowed it, merely remarks: "Si pour esprouuer le fin Or, ou autre metaus, lon les raporte sus la Touche, sans qu'on se confie de leurs tintemens, ou de leurs sons, aussi pour connoitre les gens de bien, & vertueus personnages, se faut prendre garde à la splendeur de leurs œuures, sans s'arrester au babil."

Emb. p. 140. The motto, "Feriunt summos fulmina montes," was adopted by Cæsar Dialogo, p. 10. Borgia's brother Don Francisco duke of Candia, "who had for his Impresa the Mountaine Chimera, or Acroceraunes strikê with the lightning of heauen." "Which likewise was verified in his vnhappie end, being strangled and throwne into Tiber by Cæsar his brother." Whitney has nothing in common with Giovio but the motto, and the last of his three Edit. Antv. 1564, p. 183. stanzas. The device in the Choice of Emblemes is identical with one in Sambucus, and the first two stanzas are founded on the ten elegiac lines of the same author, whose motto, "Canis queritur nimium nocere," is far more suitable to the subject than the one adopted through Giovio from Horace.

Emb. p. 153*a*. Again in the motto only, Pro bono malum, is there a correspondence
Dialogo, p. 135. between Whitney and Giovio. The illustrations given are widely different, though both appropriate: "Master Lodouico Aristo," says Giovio, as translated by Daniell, "inuented a notable Impresa, figuring a Hiue of Bees with their home, whom the vngratfull peasant doth stiffle with smoke, bereauing them of life, to recouer their honie and waxe: with this mot, Pro bono malum: signifying thereby as it is thought how he had beene ill intreated of a certaine Nobleman, which may also bee gessed by his Satyrs."

Fable 70. Whitney's device is from Faerni's Fables, and pictures the hind that injured the branches which concealed her, and thus returned evil for good, and brought vengeance on herself; for

"Divina ingratos homines ulciscitur ira."

Emb. p. 166*b*. Whitney applies the motto, "Si Deus nobiscum, quis contra nos," so as Dialogo, p. 26. to suit a device for the apostle Paul;* but Giovio, in a passage which Daniell omits, appropriates it to one of the kings of France. After describing the device of Louis XII., a hedgehog crowned, Giovio says: "I have passed by the Impresa of Charles VIII., because it had neither shape nor subject, though it had a motto very beautiful in spirit, 'If God be for us, who against us.' On the standards and the coats of the Devises Héroïques, fol. 112. * Thus given by Paradin: "Saint Paul, en l'isle de Malte fut mordu d'vn Vipere: ce neantmoins (quoique les Barbares du lieu le euitasse autrement) ne valut pis de la morsure, secouant de sa main la Beste dans le feu: car veritablement à qui Dieu veut aider il n'y a rien qui puisse nuire." archers of the guard there was nothing but the letter K surmounted by the crown, which indicated Charles's own name."

Our last instance is of similarity of devices between Whitney and Giovio, but of dissimilarity of mottoes. The device was invented by Giovio himself, — an elephant crushing a dragon. The mottoes are, in the dialogue, a Spanish one, "NON VOS ALABEREIS," You need not boast; and in the Choice of Emblemes, "Victoria cruenta," A bloody victory, from Plantin's edition of Sambucus, 1569, p. 228. Giovio is rehearsing three Impresas of his own, which he made "at the request of two Gentlemen of the house of Flisca, Sinibaldo & Ottobuono, whereof one was to signifie the revenge, which they had of the death of their Brother Girolamo, cruelly murdered by the Fregosi cõpetitors of the state: for the which these lost their liues, Zaccaria Fregoso, S. Fregosino, Lvdouvico and Guido: which reuenge did something recomforte them for the losse of their Brother." "I therfore figured an Elephant assaltẽd of a Dragõ, who twinding about the legges of his enemie, is wont by his venomous byting to empoyson him, wherewith he dieth. But the Elephant by nature knowing the daunger, trayleth him along the grounde till he come to some stone or blocke, whereunto leaning himself he rubbeth there against the Dragon that he dieth." Emb. p. 195. Dialogo, p. 79.

Ruscelli's Discourse furnishes little, if anything, to be remarked upon in immediate connection with Whitney: the case is somewhat different with regard to the "Ragionamento," or Treatise, by Lodovico Domenichi, edition Venice 1556. Here we find the germs at least of several of Whitney's emblems. I name two for example's sake: one, the withered elm and the fruitful vine supported by it* — illustrating the motto, "Amicitia post mortem dvratvra:" the other, a wakeful dog (Whitney says a lion) keeping guard over a flock, or at the gate of a church† — a device suiting the motto, Non dormit qvi cvstodit, He sleeps Plate LXI. Emb. pp. 62 and 120. Ragionamento, pp. 102 and 134.

* Domenichi's text is: "Questo m'ha fatto ricordare una Impresa dell' Alciato ne suoi Embleme, laquale è una Vite fresca & uiua abbracciata sopra uno Olmo secco, con un motto, AMICITIA POST MORTEM DVRATVRA; ilche si potrebbe appropriare a Donna ualorosa & pudica, la quale si come in uita ha di continuo amato, & mantenuta fede al marito, cosi lama & honora ancho dopo morte, con fermo proponimento di non douersi mai piu scordar di lui, & della sede promessagli." Plate LXI. p. 102.

† "Per li Cani anchora," says Domenichi, "sono interpretati i prelati del le sacre Chiese di Christo; iquali si proueggono per difendere le greggie dalle insidie de gli auersari & per custodir sicure le pecorelle da ogni ingiuria de lupi. È attribuita ancho al Cane la memoria, la fede, & lamicitia. Però mi parue conuenirsi questa Impresa si honorato personaggio, col motto NON DORMIT QVI CVSTODIT." pp. 133 and 134.

not who watches, or "Vigilantia et custodia," Watchfulness and guardianship. A comparison of the two writers, and an investigation into the two emblems, will reveal how close the relations are between emblem writers generally, and how we may often trace out their resemblances and imitations.

Edit. 1581, Emb. 159. The first example we have in Alciat's lines, followed by Whitney, p. 62:

"ARENTEM senio, nudam quoq; frondibus vlmum,
Complexa est viridi vitis opaca coma:
Agnoscitq; vices naturæ, & gratæ parenti
Officij reddit mutua iura suo.
Exemploq; monet, tales nos quærere amicos,
Quos neque disiungat fœdere summa dies."

Edit. 1581, Emb. 15. The second also from the same author, Whitney, p. 120:

"INSTANTIS quòd signa canens det gallus Eoi,
Et reuocet famulas ad noua pensa manus:
Turribus in sacris effingitur ærea peluis,
Ad superos mentem quòd reuocet vigilem.
Est leo: sed custos oculis quia dormit apertis,
Templorum idcirco ponitur ante fores."

"PAOLO GIOVIO'S AND GABRIEL SYMEONI'S SENTENTIOSE IMPRESE," p. 240.

This joint work is the only one of theirs to which we have given special references for devices copied by Whitney; but if the inquiry had not been limited to such books as were the probable or the undoubted sources of his emblems, a much fuller notice of Giovio and Plates LX. LXI. and LXII. of Symeoni would have been given. The omission might in part be supplied by references to the titles of some of the earliest editions both of the "Dialogo," and of the "Devises Héroïques," to which first Paradin and then Whitney were largely indebted.

Essays, p. 275. From the records of Giovio's death, December 11th 1552, and the date of Antonio Barre's Roman edition of the Dialogo, October 8th 1555, it appears that nearly three years elapsed between the one event and the other; and Ruscelli, writing in February 1556, in some degree confirms this by speaking of the bishop of Nocera as "the very reverend Paolo Giovio of happy memory."

Plates LX. and LXI. To the want of the author's own supervision it is to be attributed that, between the editions of Antonio Barre in 1555 and of Gabriel Giolito in 1556 and the editions of Giordano Ziletti in 1556 and 1560, there should be a difference amounting to eight or nine pages. The pages thus added are however omitted from Roville's French edition of 1561, and from his Italian edition of 1574, which agree with Barre's and Giolito's. The titles of Roville's French and Italian editions have not been given, and are here subjoined, because, through Paradin, they are the undoubted originals of many of Whitney's devices.

DIALOGVE DES DEVISES D'ARMES ET D'AMOVRS DV S. PAOLO IOVIO, Auec vn Discours de M. Loys Dominique sur le mesme subiet. Traduit d'Italien par S. Vasquin Philieul. Auquel auons adiousté les Deuises Héroïques & Morales du Seigneur GABRIEL SYMEON. A LYON, PAR GVILLAVME ROVILLE. 1561. Auec Priuilegio du Roy.' 4to, pp. 255, devices 136, ovals with highly ornamented borders.

DIALOGO DELL' IMPRESE MILITARIA et Amorose di Monsignor Giouio Vescouo di Nocera, Et del S. Gabriel Symeoni Fiorentino. Con vn ragionamento di M. Lodouico Domenichi, nel medesimo sogetto. Con la Tauola. IN LYONI Appresso Guglielmo Rouillio, 1574." 8vo, pages 280, besides the tables. The devices are 136, also ovals, but without borders, yet evidently from the same blocks with the French edition of 1561, though considerably worn by use.*

We will just add, respecting "the Worthy Tract of Paulus Iouius" Plate LX.
"by Samuell Daniell late Student in Oxenforde," that it is dedicated "TO THE RIGHT WORSHIPFVL SIR EDWARD Dimmock, Champion to her Maiestie," to whom "SAMVEL DANIEL wisheth happie health with increase of Worship." In 10 pages "To his Good Frend Samvel Daniel N. W. Wisheth health;" and in 14 pages S. D. makes an address "TO THE FRENDLY READER;" then writes the translator, "HERE BEGIN THE Discovrses of Pavlvs Jovivs Bishop of Nocera, in the forme of a Dialogue had betweene him and Lodouicus Dominicus. Dedicated to S. Cosimo Duke of Florence." The translation comprises 99 pages; and then in 12 pages "HERE FOLLOW tovching the Former subiect, certaine notable deuises both militarie and amorous, Collected by Samuel Daniel."

The rarity of these editions almost demands the notice which has been given of them; but that notice is the more required because the works themselves opened up the principles on which devices and emblems are formed, and furnished the students and scholars of the latter half of the sixteenth century with examples of emblem art to guide as well as to instruct. Indeed any general history of the subject would bestow marked attention on the Italian writers who, in discoursing of Imprints military and amorous, have collected and preserved information full of interest and value.

* "LE SENTENTIOSE IMPRESE," also published by Roville in 1562, makes use of 126 of the same blocks, with an ornamented but different border. Discarding the borders altogether, Plantin's artist, in executing the devices for the Antwerp edition of Paradin, followed Roville's woodcuts very closely; and thus, as we have shown, 32 of Whitney's emblems are, for the designing at least, to be ascribed to the artists of Lyons or of Italy. Plate XXXVI. Essays, p. 240. Essays, p. 248.

And now, having brought my labours as editor to a close, I may be allowed to say that I feel far less confident than I did when I began them, of having sufficiently prepared myself by reading and study for the work. With every research that I have made, the extent, and I may add the worth, of emblem literature has grown upon me; and if I had known as much then as I do at this time, probably I should have retired from the enterprise, deeming myself unequal to it: but having once in earnest put my hand to the plough I determined not to look back: the fallow ground has been upturned, and such seed cast in as research and opportunity supplied. His task accomplished is of course a creation of joy to the writer; much more would he have it, for his readers, a creation of regard in behalf of a class of authors long neglected, and especially of interest in those combinations of artistic skill and poetic imagery which at the revival of learning in Europe contributed so much both to amuse and instruct the literary world.

THE SECOND PART OR A GARDEN OF HEROYCAL

Devices: furniſhed, and adorned with Emblemes, and Impreſa's of ſundry natures. Newly deviſed, moralized, and publiſhed,

BY HENRY PEACHAM, Mr, of Artes.

P 3.

Date 1612.

DEATH meeting once, with CVPID in an Inne,
Where roome was ſcant, togeither both they lay.
Both wearie, (for they roving both had beene,)
Now on the morrow when they ſhould away,
CVPID Death's quiver at his back had throwne,
And DEATH tooke CVPIDS, thinking it his owne.

Hoc ſcom habet Whitnæus in ſ Embl: quod bona cum illius venia ab Authore etiam murmurez ſam.

By this o're-ſight, it ſhortly came to paſſe,
That young men died, who readie were to wed:
And age did revell with his bonny-laſſe,
Compoſing girlonds for his hoarie head:
Invert not Nature, oh ye Powers twaine,
Giue CVPID'S dartes, and DEATH take thine againe.

A sweet Nosgay,

Or pleasant Posye: containing a hundred and ten Phylosophicall Flowers. &c.

¶ The I. Flower.

Such Freendes as haue ben absent more ioyful be at meeting (long Then those which euer present are and dayly haue their greetyng.

¶ The II

¶ When perils they are present, then doth absence keepe thee free: Whereas, if that thou present were: might dangers light on thee.

The III.

¶ The presence of the mynd must be preferd, if we do well: Aboue the bodyes presence; for it farre doth it excell.

To the worshipfull and right vertuous yong Gentylman, GEORGE MAINVVARING Esquier: IS. VV. wissheth happye health with good successe in all his godly affayres.

When I (good M. MAINVVARING) had made this simple Nosegaye: I was in minde to bestow the same on some dere frind, of which number I haue good occasion to accompt you chiefe: But waying with my selfe, that although the Flowers bound in the same were good: yet so little of my labour was in them that they were not (as I wysht they should) to bee esteemed as recompence for the least of a great number of benefites, which I haue frō time to time (euen from our Childhod bethertō) receaued of you: yet least by me, you might be occasioned to say, as ANTIPATER sayd of DEMADES of Athens, that he should neuer see him with geueing, I would be shewe my selfe satisfied, gratifye your Guifts, and also by the same, make a confession that by deedes you haue deserued benefites: which as DIOGENES

THIS anchor stout, nor fails in calm, nor storm,
That holy cross doth weary pilgrims guide;
On either hand a dove, of peace the form,
By cross and anchor, ever will abide:
So hope, and faith, and love these symbols give,
The very way of truth by which to live.

In worldly strife our souls are tost and torn,
They have no rest who seize ambition's lure,
Round rugged deserts wander they forlorn,
Nor health nor healing comes their wounds to cure;
But own the cross, the anchor and the dove,—
Then beams around our lives eternal love.
